language teaching

Note from the editors

*Following the state-of-the-art article on action research by Anne Burns in the last issue (*Language Teaching 38.2, pp. 57–74), in the present issue, Steve Mann looks at the important reflective and developmental processes that need to be considered in the context of such research to help those who want to grow and develop as language teachers. Processes that have been identified as instrumental and supportive in teacher development, such as reflection, exploration and evaluation, are considered alongside tools such as journal writing, narrative enquiry and collaborative research to argue that sustaining teacher development is important for both the individual teacher and the school.

About the journal

Language Teaching provides professionals and academics with an up-to-date and convenient source of references on research in second and foreign language learning and teaching. Each four-part volume includes about seven hundred abstracts of research articles reporting the latest developments in language education. The abstracts – concise and informative summaries of the original articles – are grouped broadly into the following categories: language teaching, language learning, reading and writing, language testing, teacher education, bilingual education & bilingualism, sociolinguistics and applied linguistics. Each abstract is accompanied by full bibliographic information. The abstracts are selected from some two hundred key international periodicals surveyed regularly upon their publication. Additional features of each journal issue are a state-of-the-art article and a subject index, an author index, a source index and a list of publications received. Each volume includes a list of the periodicals surveyed for abstracting.

The editors are happy to consider advice on additional journals for abstracting.

State-of-the-art articles

In each issue, Language Teaching features a state-of-the-art article on a particular topic. These are original articles specially commissioned from experts in the relevant fields, presenting a unique and authoritative overview and synthesis, with an extensive bibliography, of research on foreign and second language education. The articles cover a wide range of diverse and important topics, providing up-to-date accounts of research already carried out as well as projecting future research trends. Prior to final acceptance for publication, the articles are peer-reviewed by members of the journal's Editorial and Advisory Boards and by external reviewers.

Recent and forthcoming state-of-the-art articles focus on the following topics:

- writing in a foreign language (Teresa O'Brien)
- academic writing (Brian Paltridge)
- culture and language learning (Michael Byram & Anwei Feng)
- context and vocabulary teaching (JoDee Walters)
- action research (Anne Burns)
- teacher's development (Steve Mann – this issue)
- conversation analysis (Paul Seedhouse)
- language medium in European higher education (James A. Coleman)
- feedback on L2 students' writing (Kenneth Hyland & Fiona Hyland)
- corpus linguistics and foreign language learning (Melinda Tan)
- distance learning of foreign languages (Cynthia White)
- The Common European Framework of Reference for Languages (David Little)
- authentic materials and authenticity in foreign language learning (Alex Gilmore)
- learner autonomy (Phil Benson)
- memory in foreign language learning (Peter Robinson)
- applied linguistics and language teaching research in Japan (Steve Cornwell, Andrea Maeda & Eton Churchill)
- applied linguistics and language teaching research in Australia (Jenny Miller & Cathy Elder)

The editors are happy to consider proposals for state-of-the-art articles on new topics or topics not covered sufficiently in the past volumes of Language Teaching.

Annual research review

Volume 39 of Language Teaching will resume an annual research review. In these feature articles, Richard Johnstone provides a stimulating and authoritative overview of recent significant research and emerging research trends in language teaching and learning.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0261444805002855 Published online by Cambridge University Press