ANALOGY AND ASSOCIATION IN LINGUISTICS AND PSYCHOLOGY by Erwin A. Esper. A thorough survey, from the ancient Greeks to the present, of theories on the role of analogy and association in human behavior, especially as they apply to language. Erwin Esper's qualifications for this study are unique, combining a solid grounding in the classics with deep knowledge of nineteenth- and twentieth-century philology and linguistics and with many years of research and teaching in psychology. He is thus able to show the cyclicity with which certain views or approaches have recurred, often being hailed as new when actually they have been explored before not once but repeatedly. $11.00

LEXIQUE FRANÇAIS MODERNE-ANCIEN FRANÇAIS by Ralph de Gorog. For students of French linguistics, medieval literature, and the history of the Middle Ages, there has long been a need for a modern French-Old French lexicon. A wealth of untapped material remains hidden in the existing Old French dictionaries, being inaccessible under the one-dimensional arrangement of those works. This newly available material should be of importance to students of historical linguistics, especially where lexical relationships are concerned, and to scholars concerned with the semantic development of the French language. $15.00

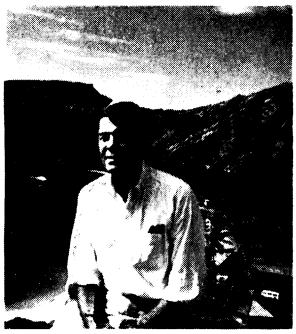

STUDIES IN SOUTHEASTERN INDIAN LANGUAGES, edited by James M. Crawford. This book presents a regional survey of the Indian languages of the southeastern United States. In addition to general essays it includes studies of Yuchi morphology, Choctaw morphophonemics, Wichita verb structure, Shawnee noun inflection, and of Chickasaw, Cherokee, Powhatan, and Mobilian. Some of the contributors are Mary Haas, Willard Walker, W. L. Ballard, William Pulte, and Frank T. Siebert, Jr. This wide-ranging survey strikes a good balance between general overview and specific analysis, and it provides essential documents for the study of American Indian languages. When children talk, Roger Brown listens.

A First Language
The Early Stages
Roger Brown
$15.00

Roger Brown and his colleagues have long studied the developing language of pre-school children. In this longitudinal research project they recorded the conversational performance of three children, studying both semantic and grammatical aspects of language development. Relating these core findings to recent work in psychology, linguistics, and to studies of the acquisition of languages other than English, Mr. Brown has written the most exhaustive analysis of its type yet undertaken.

New books from the North-Holland Linguistics Series...

Theories of the Proposition

Ancient and Medieval Conceptions of the Bearers of Truth and Falsity

By Gabriel Nuchelmans. This book examines the problems and theories of the proposition, beginning with its existence in the works of Plato and Aristotle and concluding with discussions of such topics as the theory of the complexe significabile. The author points out that despite inevitable changes in conceptual apparatus and terminology, the main types of disputes and solutions remained remarkably constant throughout ancient and medieval times. In light of this fact, the work traces important changes in the propositional vocabulary.

Introduction to Generative Grammar

By Nicolas Ruwet. Here is a completely up-to-date introduction to contemporary transformational grammar. After a compelling discussion of the "tasks" of linguistics, this multi-detailed work examines important pretransformational linguistic models, with special emphasis on the phase-structure model. It then goes on to analyze the three major stages of the development of transformational theory—"Syntactic Structures" model, "Aspects" model, and the modern controversy between the interpretivist and generative semanticist schools.

Announcing VOLUME 2

SYNTAX AND SEMANTICS

edited by JOHN P. KIMBALL

This important new series provides up-to-date, comprehensive coverage of the latest studies in contemporary linguistics. Each volume discusses in detail topics at the frontiers of linguistic research—including the semantics of natural language and the theoretical bases of linguistics—and presents the most recent advances in transformational linguistics.

Volume 1 deals with various aspects of the semantics of natural language, including modality and presupposition, as well as the current controversy involving generative and interpretive semantics —a controversy that centers around the lexical decomposition hypothesis maintained by proponents of generative semantics.

HIGHLIGHTS OF VOLUME 2:

- 2 papers by Theo Vennemann gennant Nierfeld and Renate Bartsch present research results from studies in natural grammar—results which may be used to explain those facts not accounted for by classic transformational grammar.
- 2 papers by Talmy Givón and Alexis Takizala demonstrate the applications of non-Indo-European language studies to the study of current theoretical linguistics.
- A skillful re-evaluation of Emond's analysis of Extraposition by F. R. Higgins shows how this rule operates and outlines the general syntactical scheme in which it plays a crucial role.
- A detailed analysis of lateralization by Diana Van Lancker presents evidence that the brain processes linguistic data in different ways.
- John Kimball's detailed discussion of the word get shows that all forms of this word are derived from roughly the same syntactic source—a fact which will be useful in the test of meaning by the substitution of synonyms.
- Dorothy Siegel examines sentences that cannot be explained by the standard passive transformation yet are passive, and in which the prefix un- does not come from sentential negation yet are negative—e.g., "Alaska was uninhabited by white men for many years."

Volume 1/1972, 294 pp., now $14.50

of the

Linguistic Society of America

LANGUAGE, the journal of the Linguistic Society of America, carries technical articles dealing with problems of linguistic science, reviews of recently published linguistic works, and notes of interest to professional linguists.

As supplements to LANGUAGE, the Linguistic Society of America issues a series of occasional publications, LANGUAGE MONOGRAPHS. These are included in the subscription price of the journal, but may also be purchased separately. In the LANGUAGE MONOGRAPH series, the Society publishes independently subsidized studies which are too long to appear as articles or are otherwise unsuitable for publication in the journal. The method of application for admission to this series of supplements, and the terms of publication, may be secured from the Secretary of the Society.

SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS in the field of linguistic science are issued by the Society from time to time. These are not included in the subscription price of the journal.

MEETING HANDBOOKS, which contain program listings and abstracts of papers presented at LSA Annual Meetings, 1965 through 1972 may also be purchased separately.

A list of publications in print is available from the Secretary of the Society. Current prices for LANGUAGE are as follows: Complete volume 43, $8.00; volume 45 onward, $16.00; single numbers currently in print from volumes 39–44, $3.00; volume 45 onward, $6.00. Reprint editions of volumes 1–42 and 44 of LANGUAGE, Monographs 1–21, 25–26, and Dissertations 1–57 are available from Kraus Reprint Corporation, 16 East 46th Street, New York, N.Y. 10017, and a price list can be obtained from that address.
