SCHOLARLY COMMENTS ON ACADEMIC BUSINESS ETHICS

Edited by Alexei Marcoux and Chris MacDonald

The Business Ethics Journal Review (BEJR) is a new open access journal that publishes peer-reviewed commentaries on select articles on the ethics of business published in peer-reviewed journals. BEJR seeks to facilitate broad and prompt discussion of the best current material in business ethics scholarship. The journal provides free RSS feeds and email updates, as well as a variety of linking and sharing options for social media. Items published in BEJR are preserved in PDF format and are assigned DOIs for linking and reference. The journal thus augments the established academic publications in a manner that is useful to scholars without interfering with publishers. Indexing coverage of BEJR will be arranged with a range of relevant services.

Journals covered by BEJR include such titles as Business & Professional Ethics Journal, Business & Society, Business & Society Review, Business Ethics: A European Review, Business Ethics Quarterly, Journal of Business Ethics, Journal of Business Ethics Education, and the Journal of Markets and Morality.

A Competitive Business Ethics Simulation Game

"Sometimes you can't understand why a certain person made that bad decision until you are that person."

"People think there is good or evil with no in-between - but this exercise puts us in that in-between position. We can see how managers make decisions to benefit themselves and why they make these decisions."

"I loved this simulation. I thought it was a great project to teach us ethics and responsibility. I was always excited to come to class and see where my rig ranked and was always hoping that my rig didn't blowout. I was put in many situations where I found myself thinking about what to do, be ethical or make money. Sometimes I think that I was a little unethical mostly towards the end when increasing the rig's profits was crucial to stay in the game and earn the extra points onto our final grade."
