Contributors to this Issue

MICHAEL H. KATER is Distinguished Research Professor Emeritus of History at the Canadian Centre for German and European Studies, York University, Toronto (York University, 4700 Keele Street, North York, Ontario, Canada M3J IP3; e-mail: mkater@yorku.ca). His last published book is Composers of the Nazi Era: Eight Portraits (New York: Oxford University Press, 2000). He has just completed a book-length manuscript on youth in the Third Reich and is writing a biography of opera singer Lotte Lehmann (1888–1976).

IAN F. MCNEELY is Assistant Professor of History at the University of Oregon (Department of History, 1288 University of Oregon, Eugene, OR 97403–1288; e-mail: imcneely@uoregon.edu). He is the author of The Emancipation of Writing: German Civil Society in the Making, 1790s–1820s (Berkeley, 2003), which provides the basis for the article in this issue. He has also written a shorter monograph entitled, "Medicine on a Grand Scale": Rudolf Virchow, Liberalism, and the Public Health (London, 2002). His future research concentrates on the organization of knowledge and in particular on the research university and its historical alternatives. As part of this project, he is editing and cotranslating a collection of the foundational texts of the University of Berlin, including many of Wilhelm von Humboldt's letters.

JAMES PALMOWSKI is a Lecturer in European Studies at King's College London (School of Humanities, King's College London, London WC2R 2LS; e-mail: jan.palmowski@kcl.ac.uk). He published a monograph on Urban Liberalism in Imperial Germany: Frankfurt am Main, 1866–1914 (Oxford, 1999). With Geoff Eley in 2004, he coorganized a conference on "Citizenship and National Identity in Twentieth-Century Germany," which formed the culmination of a three-year research project, funded by the Arts and Humanities Research Board, on the relationship between constitutional evolution and identity-formation in modern Germany. As an Alexander-von-Humboldt Fellowship in 2004–2005, he is working on the manuscript of his next book, on "Heimat Between Local Patriotism and Democratic Centralism in the GDR."

GREGORY R. WITKOWSKI is an Assistant Professor of History at Briar Cliff University (3303 Rebecca Str., Box 2100, Sioux City, IA, 51104; e-mail: greg_witkowski@hotmail.com). His dissertation, "Factory to Farm, Farm to Factory: A Case Study of Communist Campaigns and Agricultural Collectivization in the German Democratic Republic" examines state planning and mass mobilization in Communist East Germany in greater detail. He has begun research on a new project, which analyzes East German charity for Africa, 1952–1989.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0008938900002740 Published online by Cambridge University Press