Contributors

ROBERT ASH is professor of economics with special reference to China and Taiwan in the department of economics and the Centre for Financial and Management Studies, and director of the Taiwan studies programme, at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), University of London.

T. H. BARRETT is professor of East Asian history at SOAS. He is the author of a number of studies of the history of Chinese religion and of Western writing on China, most recently The Woman Who Discovered Printing (Yale University Press, 2008).

ALBERT H. Y. CHEN is the Chan professor in constitutional law at the University of Hong Kong. His books include An Introduction to the Legal System of the People's Republic of China (LexisNexis, 3rd ed., 2004) and The World of Jurisprudence (Falixue de shijie) (China University of Political Science and Law Press, 2003).

JIE CHEN is the Louis I. Jaffe professor of Chinese politics and serves as chair of the department of political science at Old Dominion University. He has authored and co-authored three books, with one book forthcoming, on Chinese Politics. His most recent book, Popular Political Support in Urban China (Stanford University Press) was published in 2004.

JACK MENG TAT CHIA is a graduate student in History at the National University of Singapore. His research interests include Buddhism, Chinese popular religions, and the Chinese diaspora. He has articles published in Explorations and Marburg Journal of Religion.

DEBORAH DAVIS is professor of sociology at Yale University. She works on post-1949 Chinese society and has a particular interest in inequality and social stratification. Her latest publications include "Gendered pathways to rural schooling" (China Quarterly, No 189, with Pierre Landry, Yusheng Peng, and Xiao Jin) and Creating Wealth and Poverty in Postsocialist China (Stanford University Press, 2009, co-edited with Wang Feng).

BRUCE DICKSON is professor of political science and international affairs at George Washington University. He is the author of Wealth into Power: The Communist Party's Embrace of China's Private Sector (Cambridge University Press, 2008), Red Capitalists in China: The Party, Private Entrepreneurs, and Prospects for Political Change (Cambridge University Press, 2003), Democratization in China and Taiwan: The Adaptability of Leninist Parties (Oxford University Press, 1997), and is co-editor of four other books.

CHLOÉ FROISSART is a post-doctoral research fellow in political science at the School of Higher Studies in Social Sciences (EHESS), Centre for Studies on Modern and Contemporary China in Paris. Her PhD dissertation examines the question of citizenship for migrant workers in China.

STEVEN M. GOLDSTEIN teaches political science at Smith College and is an associate of the Asia Center at Harvard University.

DOUG GUTHRIE is professor of management at the NYU-Stern School of Business and professor of sociology in NYU's Faculty of Arts and Sciences. He is also faculty director of executive education at the Stern School. He is author of Dragon in a Three-Piece Suit: The Emergence of Capitalism in China (Princeton University Press, 2001) and China and Globalization: The Economic, Political, and Social Transformation of Chinese Society (Routledge, 2006).

CHRISTOPHER HOWE is emeritus professor at SOAS and Chair of the China panel of the British Academy. He recently co-authored China and the Global Energy Crisis: Development and Prospects for China's Oil and Natural Gas with Tatsu Kambara (Edward Elgar, 2007).

JUDE HOWELL is professor and director of the Centre for Civil Society at the London School of Economics and Political Science. Her recent books include Gender and Civil Society, co-edited with Diane Mulligan

© The China Quarterly, 2008 doi:10.1017/S0305741008001264

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741008001264 Published online by Cambridge University Press

(Routledge, 2005) Governance in China (Rowman and Littlefield, 2004) and Civil Society and Development, co-authored with Jenny Pearce (Lynne Rienner Inc. 2002). She has written extensively on issues relating to civil society, governance, labour issues, gender and development policy in China. Her current research projects include female rural political participation in China, with case studies of Hunan and Shandong provinces. She is currently directing a £5.24 million Economic Social Research Council research programme on Non-governmental Public Action.

Rebecca E. Karl teaches at New York University. She is the author of Staging the World: Chinese Nationalism at the Turn of the Twentieth Century (Duke University Press, 2002) and of the forthcoming Mao Zedong and China in the Twentieth-Century World: A Concise History (Duke University Press, 2009). She has also completed a manuscript entitled The Magic of Concepts: Philosophy and the Economic in Early and Late-Twentieth Century China.

Andrew Bingham Kennedy is currently a post-doctoral fellow in the Princeton–Harvard China and the World Program. He will be joining the faculty of the Crawford School of Economics and Government at the Australian National University in July 2009.

Wendy Larson is professor of modern Chinese literature at the University of Oregon. She publishes on modern and contemporary Chinese literature, women's writing, and film. Her most recent book is From Ah Q to Lei Feng: Freud and Revolutionary Spirit in 20th-Century China (Stanford University Press, 2008).

Michael S. Lenihan is a PhD candidate at Politics and International Studies (Pais), Warwick University. His research focuses upon the political economy of local state institutional transformation and structures of evolving sectoral-based interest coalitions.

Melanie Manion is professor of political science and public affairs at the University of Wisconsin–Madison. Her current research examines how local people's congresses navigate their agency relationships with ordinary citizens and the Communist Party.

Elisa Nesossi is a PhD candidate in the School of Law at SOAS. Her research interests include China's criminal justice system and human rights.

Michael Palmer is professor of law at the University of London. He is currently chair of the Centre of Chinese Studies and director of the East Asian Law Centre at SOAS. At present, he is also honorary professor of law at Renmin University (Beijing), Southwest University of Political Science (Chongqing) and the University of Palermo. His research in progress includes family law reform, human rights, environmental welfare, the refurbishment of people's and judicial mediation, constitutional law, and the use of mediation in criminal and administrative justice systems.

C. Patterson Giersch is an associate professor of history at Wellesley College. He teaches courses on early modern and modern China, Sino-American relations, inner Asia and China's frontiers, and global history. His research examines the expansion and consolidation of the Qing Empire during the 18th and 19th centuries, with a focus on cultural, political, and economic changes among indigenes and immigrants in Southwest China. His work has been supported by numerous grants, including an NEH fellowship. Professor Giersch is the author of several journal articles and the recent book, Asian Borderlands: The Transformation of Qing China's Yunnan Frontier (Harvard University Press, 2006).

Peter Sandby-Thomas was recently awarded his PhD in politics and international relations from the University of Nottingham and is the author of Legitimating Communist Rule in China: The Discursive Construction of Stability since Tiananmen (forthcoming with Routledge).

David Shambaugh is professor of political science and international affairs and director of the China Policy Program in the Elliott School of International Affairs at George Washington University. He has also been a non-resident senior fellow in the Foreign Policy Studies

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741008001264 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Program at the Brookings Institution. He previously served as Editor of The China Quarterly, was reader in Chinese politics in the University of London (SOAS). He has published widely on Chinese domestic and foreign affairs, as well as the international relations of Asia and Europe. His most recent book is China's Communist Party: Atrophy and Adaptation (University of California Press, 2008).

BILLY K. L. SO is professor of history at The Chinese University of Hong Kong, specializing in legal history, business history and historical GIS. The author of Prosperity, Region and Institution in Maritime China (Cambridge, MA, 2000), he has published extensively on Chinese legal history and economic history in journals like T'oung Pao, Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient, Annales: Histoire, Sciences Sociales, among others. He also contributed entries on traditional Chinese law to Oxford Encyclopaedia of Legal History.

JONATHAN SULLIVAN is a PhD student in the School of Politics and International Relations and the Methods and Data Institute at the University of Nottingham. His research focuses on various aspects of political communication and political use of the media and the Internet in China and Taiwan.

LAIXIANG SUN is chair professor of Chinese business and management in the department of financial and management studies, SOAS, University of London. He is also a research professor at Institute of Geographic Sciences and Natural Resources Research in China Academy of Sciences, and he is affiliated with International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis in Laxenburg, Austria, and Guanghua School of Management in Peking University, Beijing, China. He is the author of more than 80 research publications spanning the areas of corporate finance, corporate governance, comparative economics, integrated modelling, and business and management in the Greater China region.

WENFANG TANG is professor of political science at the University of Pittsburgh. His research interests can be viewed at www.pitt.edu/~tang.

LILY L. TSAI is associate professor of political science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Her research focuses on issues of state–society relations and institutional change. Her recent book, Accountability without Democracy (Cambridge University Press, 2007) uses a combination of original survey data and in-depth case studies to examine the ways in which informal institutions provided by social groups can substitute for formal and bureaucratic institutions to hold local officials accountable for governmental performance and public goods provision.

EZRA F. VOGEL is the Henry Ford II research professor at Harvard University. He is the author of Canton under Communism (Harvard University Press, 1967); Japan as Number One (Harvard University Press, 1979), and One Step Ahead in China (Harvard University Press, 1989).

ZHENGXU WANG is senior research fellow at the China Policy Institute (CPI), School of Contemporary Chinese Studies, University of Nottingham. He researches on Chinese politics, with a focus on political reform and democratic changes. He has published Democratization in Confucian Asia (Cambria Press, 2008), and is co-editor of East Asian Democracy and Political Development in China (Singapore, 2008). He obtained his PhD from University of Michigan.

DAVID WANK studied Chinese Language and Literature at Oberlin College and received his PhD in Sociology from Harvard University in 1993. He has spent his entire career at Sophia University, Tokyo, where he is now professor of sociology and director of the graduate programme in global studies.

QING YANG is a PhD student in the department of political science, University of Pittsburgh.

HUAJUN ZHANG is a doctoral student in Social Foundations of Education at Florida State University. His research interest is self-identity and John Dewey's philosophy of education.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741008001264 Published online by Cambridge University Press