Ana Cristina Almeida received her doctorate in ethnomusicology from the University of Aveiro (Portugal), and carried out fieldwork in Daman (India), in the United Kingdom, and in Portugal. Her work focuses on the role of music in the construction of places of memory and of imagination within the Portuguese-based creole linguistic communities living in politically non-independent territories.

Cassandre Balosso-Bardin is a postdoctoral researcher at Paris–Sorbonne for the interdisciplinary and interinstitutional research project focusing on musical gesture, music, and acoustics (GeAcMus). She completed her PhD at SOAS, University of London in 2015 under the supervision of Keith Howard. She is also known internationally as a performer on recorder and bagpipes.

Chhuon Sarin is Core Program Manager at Cambodian Living Arts, where he is responsible for the Community Arts Education and Capacity Building programmes. A sound engineer and filmmaker with a business management degree, Sarin has run the sound recording studio "Studio CLA" for over ten years.

Willie R. Collins, principal of LeFalle/Collins Projects, LLC is an ethnomusicologist and folklorist who received his PhD from UCLA. He is the author of entries in the Encyclopedia of African American Folklore and The St. James Encyclopedia of Popular Culture. Other selected writings include contributions to California Soul: Music of African Americans in the West and African Musicology, vol. II.

Brian Diettrich is senior lecturer in ethnomusicology at Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. His research has focused on Pacific Island cultures, and especially those of Micronesia. Brian is a co-author of Music in Pacific Island Cultures (Oxford University Press, 2011) and he currently serves as chair of the ICTM Study Group on Music and Dance of Oceania.

Steven Feld is a distinguished professor of anthropology emeritus at the University of New Mexico and the author of Jazz Cosmopolitanism in Accra.

Catherine Grant is lecturer in music literature at Queensland Conservatorium Griffith University, and author of Music Endangerment: How Language Maintenance Can Help (Oxford University Press, 2014). She is recipient of an Australian national Future Justice Medal for her advocacy and activism on issues of music endangerment and sustainability.

Rachel Harris teaches ethnomusicology at SOAS, University of London and researches music in China and Central Asia. Books include The Making of a Musical Canon in Chinese Central Asia and the textbook, Pieces of the Musical World. She currently leads the Leverhulme research project, Sounding Islam in China.

Gisa Jähnichien obtained her PhD at Humboldt University, Berlin and her venia legendi at Vienna University. She is chair of the ICTM Study Group on Musical Instruments and current editor of the book series, Studia Instrumentorum Musicae Popularis (New Series).

Deborah Justice received her PhD in folklore and ethnomusicology from Indiana University in 2012, and is currently manager of the Cornell Concert Series at Cornell University in Ithaca, NY. She is the author of numerous ethnomusicology chapters and articles (Yearbook for Traditional Music, Folklore Forum, Journal of Religion, Media, and Digital Culture) and plays clawhammer banjo.

Inderjit N. Kaur just completed her dissertation in ethnomusicology at the University of California, Berkeley, and is currently a lecturer there in the Department of Music. Her research on Sikh sabad kīrtan (sung sacred poetry) and its various musical genres

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.48.2016.0251 Published online by Cambridge University Press

explores affective listening as a site of embodied knowledge. She is trained in North Indian classical music and the South Indian classical dance, Bharat Natyam, and grew up singing sabad kīrtan in the classical genre. Her publications include "Sikh shabad kīrtan and gurmat sangīt: What's in the name?" (Journal of Punjab Studies, 2011) and thirteen entries on India forthcoming in Grove Music Online.

Daithí Kearney, ethnomusicologist, geographer, and performer, is a lecturer in music at Dundalk Institute of Technology. His research is primarily focused on Irish traditional music but extends to include performance studies, community music, and music education. Daithí tours regularly as a musician, singer, and dancer with a number of groups.

Alexander Kharuto is assistant professor and head of the Department of Musical Informatics at the Moscow Conservatory, which he joined in 1993, concentrating in his research on computer-assisted analysis of music. He graduated from the Moscow Academy of Informatics and Communications in 1971, completing his PhD on the theory of communication systems in 1989 and specializing further in informatics and social science.

Katrin Lengwinat was born in Berlin and has been living in Venezuela since 1993. She studied musicology and Romance languages and literature, and holds a doctoral degree in musicology from Humboldt University, Berlin. Current research projects include Venezuelan traditional music and different theoretical topics. She teaches musicology at the University of Arts (UNEARTE) in Caracas.

Scott V. Linford is a PhD candidate at the University of California, Los Angeles. He is the director of the UCLA Bluegrass and Old Time String Bands and a former editor-in-chief of Ethnomusicology Review. His research concerns ethnic, gender, and political identity production in southern Senegal, Central America, and the United States.

Elizabeth Mackinlay is an associate professor in the School of Education at the University of Queensland where she teaches Indigenous education, gender studies, and arts education. She is involved in a number of different research projects covering Indigenous Australian studies, critical auto-ethnography and decoloniality, and feminism in higher education. Liz is currently co-editor of the Australian Journal of Indigenous Education (AJIE).

Irene Markoff teaches a variety of music courses and directs the Balkan Music Ensemble at York University in Toronto, where she also contributes to the graduate programme in music. Her research and many publications focus on Bulgarian and Turkish traditional and popular music, and aspects of Alevi/Bektashi expressive culture in Turkey, Bulgaria, and Canada. She contributed to the Middle East volume of The Garland Encyclopedia of World Music as a consulting editor and with several articles.

Maurice Mengel holds a PhD in ethnomusicology from Cologne, Germany. He worked in digital library projects at the Phonogramm-Archiv in Berlin, Germany, and wrote his dissertation on C. Brăiloiu's archive in Bucharest, Romania and the cultural policy of his successors during the socialist period. Currently, he enjoys teaching courses on electronic dance music at Syracuse University.

Rebecca S. Miller is professor of music at Hampshire College in Amherst, Massachusetts, USA, where she teaches ethnomusicology and radio journalism. Her book, Carriacou String Band Serenade: Performing Identity in the Eastern Caribbean (2007), examines political upheaval and performance in Carriacou, Grenada. Miller is completing a second book on popular music (dance orchestras and showbands) in Ireland between 1930 and 1975. An applied ethnomusicologist, Miller has documented and presented the traditional arts from a number of immigrant and refugee communities throughout the United States. Her work has culminated in publications, recordings, festivals, and award-winning radio and video documentaries.

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.48.2016.0251 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Steven G. Nelson is a professor in the Japanese Department of the Faculty of Letters, and director of the International Japanese Studies Institute at Hosei University in Tokyo. His research focuses on the history, practice, theory, and notation of the two oldest genres of classical Japanese music, gagaku and shōmyō (Buddhist chant), as well as on music in works of classical literature such as The Tale of Genji and The Tale of the Heike.

Hankus Netsky is chair of New England Conservatory's Contemporary Improvisation Department and founder and director of the Klezmer Conservatory Band, an internationally renowned Yiddish music ensemble. He has composed extensively for film, theatre, and television, and collaborated, performed, and recorded with many well-known artists, including Itzhak Perlman and Theodore Bikel.

Sean Norton is a writer, musician, and scholar. He has taught courses in world music studies and immigration at the University of Massachusetts, Hampshire College, and Greenfield Community College. His interests include Cambodia and the Khmer diaspora, immigration, colonialism, and fiction.

Ragnheidur Olafsdottir, PhD (Australian National University), CandMag (University of Oslo), BEd (Kennaraháskóli Íslands) is an independent scholar at the Reykjavik Academia in Iceland. She writes about traditional Icelandic music and teaches rimur-intoning and traditional performance studies.

Anne van Oostrum is lecturer in cultural musicology specializing in the music of the Middle East at the Department of Musicology of the University of Amsterdam. She finished her PhD thesis, "The Art of Nay playing in Modern Egypt," in 2004. At present, she is working on the collection of the Dutch Arabist, Christiaan Snouck Hurgronje (1857–1936).

Ivona Opetčeska Tatarčevska is head of Department for Intangible Cultural Heritage in the Cultural Heritage Protection Office of the Ministry of Culture of the Republic of Macedonia. She is currently a PhD student at the University of Zagreb Faculty for Humanities and Social Sciences. She has received degrees in ethnomusicology (BA) and ethnology and anthropology (MS).

John-Carlos Perea received his PhD in music (ethnomusicology) from the University of California, Berkeley in 2009, and is currently an associate professor of American Indian Studies in the College of Ethnic Studies at San Francisco State University. He is the author of Intertribal Native American Music in the United States (Oxford University Press, 2014).

Svanibor Pettan is professor and chair of the ethnomusicology programme at the University of Ljubljana, Slovenia. His academic degrees are from the universities of Zagreb, Ljubljana, and Maryland, while his fieldwork sites include former Yugoslav lands, Australia, Egypt, Norway, Sri Lanka, USA, and Zanzibar. The prevalent themes are music, politics and war, multiculturalism, minorities, and applied ethnomusicology. Recent publications include Kosovo through the Eyes of Local Romani (Gypsy) Musicians (SEM Audio-Visual Series) and The Oxford Handbook of Applied Ethnomusicology (co-edited with Jeff Todd Titon). He is President of the Cultural and Ethnomusicological Society Folk Slovenia and Secretary General of the ICTM.

Colin Quigley, University of Limerick, has published monographs on the traditional dance and fiddling of Newfoundland: Close to the Floor (1985) and Music from the Heart (1995). Since 1990, he has extended his research on fiddle band music and dance to Romania and Hungary. He is an accomplished fiddler in several styles.

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.48.2016.0251 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Anne K. Rasmussen is professor of ethnomusicology, Bickers Professor of Middle Eastern Studies, and director of the Middle Eastern Music Ensemble at the College of William and Mary. Current president of the Society for Ethnomusicology, Rasmussen's research interests include music of Arab and Islamicate communities, and music and multiculturalism in North America. She is author of Women, the Recited Qur'an and Islamic Music in Indonesia, co-editor with David Harnish of Divine Inspirations: Music and Islam in Indonesia, co-editor with Kip Lornell of The Music of Multicultural America, and editor of The World of Music's 2012 issue on "The Music of Oman."

Lawrence Ross received his PhD from The Graduate Center, City University of New York, in 2011. He is currently a senior lecturer in the Academy of Malay Studies, University of Malaya. His research focuses on musical traditions of the Malayan Peninsula and their connections to neighbouring Thailand, Indonesia, and Indochina.

Hande Sağlam is head of the sound archive of the Institute of Folk Music Research and Ethnomusicology at the University of Music and Performing Arts in Vienna. She holds a master's degree in music theory and a doctorate in ethnomusicology from the same university.

Margaret Sarkissian is professor of music at Smith College in Massachusetts. She is author of D'Albuquerque's Children: Performing Tradition in Malaysia's Portuguese Settlement (2000) and the CD and booklet Kantiga di Padri să Chang (1998). Her research has focused primarily on the music and dance of the Portuguese-Eurasian and Straits Chinese communities of Malacca, Malaysia. She was audio reviews editor of the Yearbook for Traditional Music from 2002 to 2010 and first vice president of the Society for Ethnomusicology from 2013 to 2015.

Joseph Sciorra is the director of Academic and Cultural Programs at Queens College's John D. Calandra Italian American Institute. He is the co-editor of Neapolitan Postcards: The Canzone Napoletana as Transnational Subject (Rowman & Littlefield, 2016) and the author of Built with Faith: Italian American Imagination and Catholic Material Culture in New York City (University of Tennessee Press, 2015).

Liselotte Sels completed a PhD in art science about Turkish folk music in a transnational context at Ghent University, Belgium in 2014. In 2015 she was a visiting scholar (B.A.E.F. research fellow) at University of California, Santa Barbara. Her postdoctoral research engages with the radif in the contemporary Iranian musical landscape.

Velika Stojkova Serafimovska is an assistant professor and researcher at the Institute for Folklore "Marko Cepenkov" in Skopje, Macedonia. She received her PhD in ethnomusicology from Sts. Cyril and Methodius University in Skopje. Her research and publications focus on transitional processes of Macedonian traditional music in sociological and anthropological contexts.

Gabriel Solis is professor of music, African American studies, and anthropology at the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign. He is the author of books and articles on jazz, rock, and Indigenous music of the southwestern Pacific, and is currently at work on a book dealing with intersections between Indigenous and African diasporic musicians in Australia and Melanesia.

Thomas Solomon is professor of musicology in the Grieg Academy–Department of Music at the University of Bergen. He has done field research in Bolivia on musical imaginations of ecology, place, and identity, and in Istanbul on place and identity in Turkish hip-hop; he has also published on various theoretical topics in ethnomusicology and popular music studies. His publications include articles in the journals Ethnomusicology, Popular Music, European Journal of Cultural Studies, and

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.48.2016.0251 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Yearbook for Traditional Music, as well as numerous chapters in edited volumes. He is also editor or co-editor of three books.

Heather Sparling is the Canada Research Chair of Musical Traditions and an associate professor of ethnomusicology at Cape Breton University. Her research encompasses Gaelic song in Nova Scotia, Atlantic Canadian disaster songs (disastersongs.ca), and Cape Breton step dance. She is the author of Reeling Roosters & Dancing Ducks: Celtic Mouth Music (Cape Breton University Press, 2014) and editor of MUSICultures, the journal of the Canadian Society for Traditional Music. She is also the principal flutist of the Cape Breton Orchestra and a fluent Scottish Gaelic learner.

Jonathan P. J. Stock is professor of music and head of the School of Music and Theatre at University College Cork. His research is concerned with tradition and change in music in China, Taiwan, and England, and he is currently completing a book on the role of music in the daily life of the Bunun indigenous group in Taiwan. He is co-editor of the journal Ethnomusicology Forum.

Alison Tokita is Director of the Research Centre for Traditional Japanese Music at the Kyoto City University of Arts. She is a researcher of Japanese performed narratives, her monograph on which, Japanese Singers of Tales: Ten Centuries of Performed Narrative, was published by Ashgate in 2015.

Peter Toner is a social anthropologist at St. Thomas University in Fredericton, New Brunswick, Canada. Trained at the Australian National University, his ethnographic research and fieldwork focuses on Australian Aboriginal ritual music and sociality, and on Irish cultural identity and folk music in Atlantic Canada.

Sarah Town is a PhD candidate in music at Princeton University, having completed an MA at City College of New York. Her article "La revolución será bailada: 'Los del baile' (1965) de Nicolás Guillén Landrián" is forthcoming, and her dissertation is tentatively titled "Timbeando en Nueva York: Cuban Dance Culture in New York City."

Tsan-Huang Tsai is a senior lecturer at Australian National University and the editor of two books: Captured Memories of a Fading Musical Past: The Chinese Instrument Collection at the Music Department of the Chinese University of Hong Kong (Yuan-Liou Publishing, 2010) and Listening to China's Cultural Revolution: Music, Politics, and Cultural Continuities co-edited with Paul Clark and Laikwan Pang (Palgrave Macmillan, 2016), as well as more than twenty journal articles.

Saule Utegalieva is a professor at the Department of Musicology and Composition of the Kurmangazy Kazakh National Conservatory. She graduated from the Kurmangazy Kazakh National Conservatory in 1981, and in 1987 gained her PhD on the subject, "Functional Context of Musical Thinking of the Kazakh Dombra Players," from the Russian Institute for History of the Arts, Saint Petersburg. In 2011–2013 she underwent further musicological training at the Moscow P. I. Tchaikovsky State Conservatory, publishing after that a monograph titled The Sound World of Music of the Turkic Peoples: Theory, History, Practice (On the Basis of Central Asian Instrumental Traditions).

Dave Wilson is a lecturer at Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. He received his PhD in ethnomusicology at UCLA, and his work has been supported by the American Council of Learned Societies and the American Councils of International Education. A musician and composer across a wide range of musical traditions, his ongoing research in southeastern Europe explores issues of nationalism, belonging, social transformation, and the nature of scenes.

Louise Wrazen is associate professor in the Department of Music (School of the Arts, Media, Performance and Design) at York University, Toronto, Canada. Her publications include the co-edited volume Performing Gender, Place, and Emotion in Music: Global

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.48.2016.0251 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Perspectives (with Fiona Magowan) and articles on diasporic performance, gender, place, and identity focusing on the music and dance of the Polish Tatras, published in this journal and Ethnomusicology, among others.

Violetta N. Yunusova joined the Foreign Music Department at the Moscow P. I. Tchaikovsky State Conservatory in 1994. She graduated from the Academy of Arts in Ufa (1976), completing post-graduate studies at the Leningrad (SPb) Institute of Theatre, Music and Cinema. Her PhD dissertation, "The Problems of Formation of Azerbaijan Instrumental Mugham Improvisations" (1982), was followed by a post-doctoral dissertation on "The Creative Process in Asian Classical Music."

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.48.2016.0251 Published online by Cambridge University Press