Contributors

Alex J. Bellamy is professor of peace and conflict studies and director of the Asia-Pacific Centre for the Responsibility to Protect at the University of Queensland, Australia. His most recent book is World Peace (and How We Can Achieve It) (2019). He is currently completing a book entitled The Betrayal of Syria: War, Atrocities, and the Failure of Diplomacy. a.bellamy@uq.edu.au

Pamina Firchow is associate professor of conflict resolution and coexistence at Brandeis University's Heller School for Social Policy and Management. She has published widely on participatory approaches to design, measurement, and evaluation of transitional justice, reconciliation, and peacebuilding interventions, including her most recent book, Reclaiming Everyday Peace: Local Voices in Measurement and Evaluation after War (2018). pfirchow@brandeis.edu

Luke Glanville is associate professor in the Department of International Relations at the Australian National University. He is the author of Sovereignty and the Responsibility to Protect: A New History (2014) and has published in various journals, including International Studies Quarterly, European Journal of International Relations, and European Journal of International Law. luke.glanville@anu.edu.au

Nils Petter Gleditsch is a research professor at the Peace Research Institute Oslo and professor emeritus of political science at the Norwegian University of Science and Technology. He is a former editor of Journal of Peace Research and served as president of the International Studies Association from 2008 to 2009. nilspg@prio.org

Julia Gray is an associate professor of political science at the University of Pennsylvania, with a secondary appointment in the Wharton School's Legal Studies and Business Ethics Department. She studies international political economy and international organizations, with a focus on the institutions that govern cross-border economic interactions in emerging markets. Her first book, The Company States Keep: International Economic Organizations and Investor Perceptions (2013), won the Georgetown University Lepgold Book Prize for best book in international relations. She has been a fellow at Stanford University's Center on Democracy, Development and the Rule of Law; the Wilson Center in Washington, D.C.; and Princeton University's Niehaus Center for Globalization and Governance. She is currently writing a book called How International Organizations Survive. jcgray@sas.upenn.edu

A. C. Grayling is the master of the New College of the Humanities in London and Ethics & International Affairs, 34, no. 1 (2020), pp. 1–2.

© 2020 Carnegie Council for Ethics in International Affairs doi:10.1017/S089267942000012X

https://doi.org/10.1017/S089267942000012X Published online by Cambridge University Press

its professor of philosophy. He is also a supernumerary fellow of St Anne's College at the University of Oxford. He is the author of over thirty books focusing on philosophy, biography, and the history of ideas, as well as various essays. He was for a number of years a columnist at the Guardian, the Times, and Prospect magazine. He has contributed to many leading newspapers in the United Kingdom, the United States, and Australia; to BBC Radio 3 and 4 and the BBC World Service, for which he did the annual "Exchanges at the Frontier" series; and he has often appeared on television. He has twice been a judge for the Booker Prize, in 2014 serving as the chair of the judging panel. He is a fellow of the Royal Society of Arts, a fellow of the Royal Society of Literature, a vice president of Humanists UK, patron of the Defence Humanists, honorary associate of the National Secular Society, and a patron of Dignity in Dying. ac.grayling@nchlondon.ac.uk

Adam Henschke is an applied ethicist, working in areas that span ethics, technology, and security policy. He is a senior lecturer at the National Security College at the Australian National University. His research concerns ethical and philosophical analyses of information technology and its uses, military ethics, and the relationship between ethics and national security. He has published on surveillance, emerging military technologies and intelligence, cyberspace, and human enhancement. adam.henschke@anu.edu.au

Mathias Risse is Lucius N. Littauer Professor of Philosophy and Public Administration and the director of the Carr Center for Human Rights Policy at the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University. He has written on a broad range of topics in ethics and political philosophy at the intersection to public policy. His most recent book is On Trade Justice: A Philosophical Plea for a New Global Deal (2019), co-authored with Gabriel Wollner. His book On Justice: Philosophy, History, Foundations will appear in 2020. mathias_risse@hks.harvard.edu

Jacqui True is professor of international relations and director of Monash University's Gender, Peace and Security Centre. She is a global fellow at Peace Research Institute Oslo. Her book The Political Economy of Violence against Women (2012) won the American Political Science Association's 2012 biennial prize for the best book in human rights. She is the co-author of Doing Feminist Research in Political and Social Sciences (2010) with Brooke A. Ackerly and co-editor of The Oxford Handbook on Women, Peace, and Security (2019) with Sara E. Davies. jacqui.true@monash.edu

https://doi.org/10.1017/S089267942000012X Published online by Cambridge University Press