CONTRIBUTORS TO THIS VOLUME

ESTELLE AMY DE LA BRETÈQUE is an anthropologist and a musician. She completed her doctorate at Paris West Nanterre University in 2010 on melodized speech and narratives of sorrow among the Yezidis of Armenia. She previously conducted research on women's mourning ceremonies in Azerbaijan and on the laments of Kurdish displaced women in the suburbs of Istanbul and Diyarbakir. Out of this work she has published several articles and a book: Paroles mélodisées. Récits épiques et lamentations chez les Yézidis d'Arménie (Classiques-Garnier 2013).

BERND BRABEC DE MORI received his doctorate in musicology from the University of Vienna. He specialized in Indigenous vocal music, music in healing and sorcery, auditory anthropology, and ritual studies. After five years of field research in the western Amazon, he has worked at the Phonogrammarchiv in Vienna, the Centre for Systematic Musicology in Graz, the University of Marburg (Germany), the University for Music and Performative Arts Graz, and most recently as guest professor at the University of Vienna. Among other work, he edited The Human and Non-human in Lowland South American Indigenous Music (Ethnomusicology Forum 2013).

CLINT BRACKNELL lectures in ethnomusicology and contemporary music at the Sydney Conservatorium of Music, University of Sydney, and conducts research on Aboriginal Australian song and languages. He also writes, produces, and performs original music. His Aboriginal cultural elders from the south coast of Western Australia refer to their clan as Wirlomin Noongar.

REUBEN BROWN is an Australian Research Council research associate at the University of Melbourne. For his recently awarded PhD (University of Sydney), he collaborated with ceremony leaders of the kun-borrk/manyardi song tradition from western Arnhem Land in the Northern Territory to return archival recordings and document current repertories, analysing their significance as part of funeral and reburial ceremonies, exchange ceremonies, festivals, and informal events involving visitors.

JULIA BYL is assistant professor in music at the University of Alberta. Her ethnography, Antiphonal Histories: Resonant Pasts in the Toba Batak Musical Present (Wesleyan 2014), concerns North Sumatran history and performance. Current research areas include Indian Ocean Southeast Asia, and urban music, the individual, and the institution in East Timor.

JUDAH M. COHEN is Lou & Sybil Mervis Professor of Jewish Culture and Associate Professor of Musicology at Indiana University. Recent publications include an

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.49.2017.0212 Published online by Cambridge University Press

edited issue of American Jewish History on rabbi/songwriter Shlomo Carlebach and an essay on American cantorial schools in the Journal of the Society for American Music.

MEGAN COLLINS is an ethnomusicologist and radio documentary maker who holds a PhD from Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. She currently is consulting at GNS Science, Wellington, in the interdisciplinary area of disaster risk reduction and performed indigenous knowledge. She manages Gamelan Wellington and performs the West Sumatran rabab Pasisia Selatan regularly in Indonesia and New Zealand.

SAIDA DAUKEYEVA is a Georg Forster Research Fellow at Humboldt University in Berlin. She holds a candidate of science degree in historical musicology from the Moscow Tchaikovsky Conservatory and a PhD in ethnomusicology from the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. She is the author of Philosophy of Music by Abu Nasr Muhammad al-Farabi (Soros Foundation-Kazakhstan 2002) and a co-editor of The Music of Central Asia (Indiana University Press 2016).

REBECCA DIRKSEN is assistant professor of ethnomusicology at Indiana University and a 2016–17 Radcliffe Fellow at the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study at Harvard University. Her research on Haitian music focuses on grassroots development, disaster responses, diverse environmentalisms, and applied/engaged scholarship. Her work has been published in the Yearbook for Traditional Music, Ethnomusicology Review, the Bulletin du Bureau d'Ethnologie de la Republique d'Haïti, and elsewhere.

BORIS DOVAL has been an associate professor at UPMC, Paris, since 2008. He also works with the Lutheries, Acoustique, Musique (LAM) team of Institut Jean Le Rond d'Alembert, the Polytech'Paris-UPMC engineering school, and with the Collegium Musicae, a Sorbonne Université institute. Since 2009, he has been the head of the joint bachelor degree, Sciences et Musicologie, at UPMC. His main interests focus on speech and the singing voice, voice source analysis, glottal flow modelling, voice quality, and gestural control of voice synthesis. He graduated from CNSMDP in music writing, he is a jazz pianist and a choir singer, and he participates in new instrument ensembles like Meta-Orchestre (joystick orchestra) and Chorus Digitalis.

YOLANDA VAN EDE is senior lecturer in the anthropology department of the University of Amsterdam. She received her PhD in 1999 from the Amsterdam Institute for Social Science Research (AISSR) on ethnohistorical research of a Tibetan Buddhist nunnery in Nepal. Returning to her pre-academic passion, dance, she conducted

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.49.2017.0212 Published online by Cambridge University Press

fieldwork in Seville and Tokyo on flamenco, and in Manilla on ballroom dancing. In addition to publications on women and religion, ritual, and dance, she writes about skill and the senses. Currently she is involved in the development of a new, experimental research and educational programme that seeks to investigate effective connections between the social sciences, fine arts, and visual arts.

MEHMET UĞUR EKINCI received his PhD in politics from SOAS, University of London. He currently is an assistant professor of international relations at the Turkish National Police Academy. He is also a researcher on Ottoman music and the author of Kevserî Mecmûası: 18. Yüzyıl Saz Müziği Külliyatı [Kevserî Mecmûası: A corpus of eighteenth-century instrumental music] (İstanbul: Pan 2016).

JEFFERS ENGELHARDT is associate professor of ethnomusicology at Amherst College, where he teaches courses in ethnomusicology focusing on community-based ethnography, music and religion, voice, and analytical approaches to music and sound. His research deals broadly with music, religion, European identity, and media. He is the author of Singing the Right Way: Orthodox Christians and Secular Enchantment in Estonia (Oxford 2015) and co-edited the volume Resounding Transcendence: Transitions in Music, Religion, and Ritual (Oxford 2016). His current book project is Music and Religion (under contract with Oxford University Press), and he is Editor-in-Chief of the Yale Journal of Music and Religion.

TIBER F. M. FALZETT holds a PhD in Celtic and Scottish Studies (Ethnology), Edinburgh University. His research explores the relationship between language, music, and aesthetic thought, especially among Scottish Gaelic speakers. He is an adjunct professor in ethnomusicology at Memorial University of Newfoundland and a graduate faculty member and research associate at the Institute of Island Studies, University of Prince Edward Island.

LIONEL FEUGÈRE's research interests are the design of digital musical instruments, the singing voice, gestural control of audio synthesis, computational ethnomusicology, and bioacoustics. He worked at LIMSI on the Cantor Digitalis, a gesture-control vowel synthesizer under open source license that won first prize in the Guthman Musical Instrument Design Competition in 2015. At LAM, Institut Jean le Rond d'Alembert, he worked with ethnomusicologists and helped in the development of automatic tools (on the Telemeta platform) for retrieving and acoustically defining intermediate vocal categories from audio archives. He is now working at NRI and IRD in the acoustic communication of mosquitoes.

KRISTIN HARRIS WALSH holds a PhD in folklore from Memorial University and an MA in dance from York University. Her research and creative work focuses on percussive dance in Newfoundland and Ireland. She is an educational specialist,

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.49.2017.0212 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Faculty of Medicine, and adjunct professor, School of Music, at Memorial University.

SCHEHERAZADE HASSAN is an Iraqi ethnomusicologist who was associate professor at the University of Baghdad. She founded the first Centre for Traditional Music in Baghdad and conducted fieldwork throughout Iraq. Currently she is research associate at the Centre de Recherche en Ethnomusicologie (CREM)/Centre national de la recherché scientifique (CNRS) and at the music department at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS). Hassan chairs the ICTM Study Group on Music in the Arab World.

PHILIP HAYWARD is an adjunct professor at the University of Technology, Sydney, Australia. He has been involved in community music recording projects in Australia on Lord Howe and Norfolk Islands and in the Whitsunday Islands, and is currently a member of the audiovisual trio The Moviolas.

TALA JARJOUR is a music scholar whose current research focuses on music and religion, especially musics in and from the Middle East. She is currently a researcher with the University of Tübingen's Excellence Initiative and a visiting fellow at Yale University. Recent publications include articles in Ethnomusicology Forum and the Oxford Handbook of Music and World Christianities. Forthcoming (2018) is a monograph from Oxford University Press on Syriac chant in the city of Aleppo.

JESSE A. JOHNSTON is an ethnomusicologist, archivist, and administrator who has researched musics in central Europe and Southeast Asia. He is an adjunct faculty member at the University of Maryland, and he is also a programme officer for preservation and access at the National Endowment for the Humanities.

RICHARD JONES-BAMMAN is emeritus associate professor of music at Eastern Connecticut State University. He received his PhD in ethnomusicology from the University of Washington. His areas of specialization include Sámi culture and folk revivalism. His book, Building New Banjos for an Old-Time World, will be released in 2017 by University of Illinois Press.

ANDREW KILLICK is a reader in ethnomusicology at the University of Sheffield. He holds a BMus from the University of Edinburgh, an MA from the University of Hawai'i, and a PhD from the University of Washington, and has also taught at Illinois State University and Florida State University. His publications on Korean music include In Search of Korean Traditional Opera: Discourses of Ch'anggŭk (University of Hawaii Press 2010) and Hwang Byungki: Traditional Music and the Contemporary Composer in the Republic of Korea (Ashgate 2013). He also has research interests in Northumbrian piping and in world music pedagogy.

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.49.2017.0212 Published online by Cambridge University Press

JULIO MENDÍVIL is a Peruvian author, musician, and ethnomusicologist. He was chair of the Association for the Study of Popular Music, Latin American Branch, and director of the Center for World Music at the University of Hildesheim in Germany. He is now a full professor of ethnomusicology at the University Vienna.

LOUIS MOREAU-GAUDRY recently received a MSc in acoustics, signal processing, and computer science applied to music. He also holds the joint bachelor degree "Sciences et Musicologie" from UPMC/Paris-Sorbonne. His research interests include voice signal processing and computational music analysis.

SEAN PRIESKE received his master's degree in musicology at Humboldt University Berlin in 2016. He studied media science and German linguistics in Berlin and Newcastle. His research interests include transcultural processes in music, the social in music, and musical experience. Preparing a PhD, he has recently turned his focus to music and forced migration.

ROBERT F. REIGLE received his PhD in ethnomusicology ("Sacred Music of Serieng Village, Papua New Guinea") from the University of California, Los Angeles, and taught at Istanbul Technical University from 2002 to 2017. He produced the 1993 New Guinea Ethnomusicology Conference (Proceedings, Archive of Maori and Pacific Music) and the world's first interdisciplinary timbre conference (Spectral World Musics, Pan Yayıncılık).

ANTHONY SEEGER is an anthropologist, ethnomusicologist, audiovisual archivist, and musician. He is distinguished professor emeritus at UCLA and director emeritus of Smithsonian Folkways Recordings. He has served terms as President and as Secretary General of the ICTM.

MARK SLOBIN is the Winslow-Kaplan Professor of Music Emeritus at Wesleyan University and the author or editor of books on Afghanistan and Central Asia, eastern European Jewish music, film music, and ethnomusicology theory. His current project surveys the musical life of his hometown, Detroit, 1940s–1960s.

MARCELLO SORCE KELLER, originally a pop music arranger, later turned musicologist, is the author of What Makes Music European (Scarecrow 2012) and, with Linda Barwick, Italy in Australia's Musical Landscapes (Lyrebird 2012).

KATHLEEN A. SPANOS is a dancer and ethnochoreologist whose dissertation focused on festivals and cultural identity on the island of Montserrat. She earned her PhD in dance and performance studies from the University of Maryland, College Park (2016) and her MA in Irish dance performance from the University of

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.49.2017.0212 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Limerick (2008). She will continue her ethnographic dance and music studies as a postdoctoral Fulbright scholar in Brazil in 2018.

CHRISTIAN SPENCER ESPINOSA is the director of the Center for Research in Arts and Humanities, Universidad Mayor, Chile. He obtained his PhD in ethnomusicology at Universidad Complutense and Universidad Nova de Lisboa (2015). He is editor of Made in Latin America (Routledge 2016, with J. Mendívil) and his book Historia Social de la Cueca Urbana en Santiago is forthcoming (2017).

MATTHEW STEEL received his PhD in historical musicology from the University of Michigan, where he worked under William Malm in the Stearns Collection of Musical Instruments. He is currently professor emeritus at Western Michigan University, where he taught ethnomusicology courses in the School of Music for thirty-three years.

CHRIS TONELLI is assistant professor of popular music studies at the University of Gröningen and a research associate with the International Institute for Critical Studies in Improvisation. His writing on vocal and choral music emerges from his own practice as a soundsinger and leader of improvising "vocal exploration" choirs. He is currently completing a book that traces histories of improvisatory vocal and choral practices and theorizes the social effects of extranormal vocal sounds.

SEAN WILLIAMS teaches ethnomusicology, Irish studies, and Asian studies at The Evergreen State College in Olympia, Washington (USA). She received her PhD in ethnomusicology from the University of Washington (1990), with an emphasis in the musics of Indonesia and Ireland. She has published numerous articles and chapters for edited volumes, and is currently revising the manuscript of her eighth book.

TREVOR WIGGINS is a freelance musician-scholar, research associate at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, and recently stepped down as co-editor of Ethnomusicology Forum. His publications include books, CDs, and articles covering ethnomusicology and music education, with a particular focus on West Africa.

SÚLE GREG C. WILSON, MA, has over forty years presenting on African and post-African music and folklore. Co-founder of the Black Banjo Gathering, his writings are in New York's Village Voice newspaper, as well as Sing Out! and Rhythm Music Monthly magazines, and his book, The Drummer's Path: Moving the Spirit with Ritual and Traditional Drumming (1992), is used in numerous college courses.

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.49.2017.0212 Published online by Cambridge University Press

AJA BURRELL WOOD is an ethnomusicologist who currently teaches at CUNY–City College and Brooklyn College Conservatory of Music. She studied at Howard University, University of Maryland, and University of Michigan. Her research includes musical community among black classical musicians, jazz, and topics in Japanese popular music.

LUCY WRIGHT is an artist and ethnomusicologist, currently based at the University of East Anglia, working as senior research associate on the AHRC Connected Communities' project, "Participatory Arts and DIY Cultures." Prior to this, she worked at the University of Sheffield on the AHRC-funded "Digital Folk" project with Dr. Simon Keegan-Phipps. Her primary interests are the performances associated with the town carnivals movement and the development of interdisciplinary, artistic research approaches. More information about Lucy's art practice can be found at www.artistic-researcher.co.uk.

ANNA YATES-LU is currently completing her PhD at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), University of London. Her thesis concerns the Korean storytelling tradition p'ansori and is entitled "P'ansori Today: Reconciling Tradition and Creativity in Modern Society." Her MA in Pacific Asian Studies was also completed at SOAS.

SUSANNE ZIEGLER was responsible for the historical collections of the Berlin Phonogramm-Archiv until her retirement. Her publications focus on historical recordings of traditional music, multipart music, music in Southeast Europe, and in the Caucasus. She co-chairs the ICTM Study Group on Historical Sources of Traditional Music and is co-editor of Historical Sources of Ethnomusicology in Contemporary Debate (2017).

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.49.2017.0212 Published online by Cambridge University Press