CONTRIBUTORS

JAKUB BENEŠ is a postdoctoral research fellow at the University of Birmingham, United Kingdom. He received his PhD in history from the University of California, Davis, and is working on a monograph examining various narrative dimensions of socialist politics in east central Europe around 1900. His research interests also include peasants' and workers' movements during World War I in the Habsburg monarchy. He has previously published in Střed/Centre.

SIBELAN FORRESTER is professor of Russian at Swarthmore College. She is a specialist in Russian modernist poetry, especially Marina Tsvetaeva, and a translator from Croatian, Russian, and Serbian. Long a fan of Anglo-American science fiction, Forrester has begun teaching a regular course on Russian and east European science fiction at Swarthmore and is now examining interactions with science fiction in the United States during the Cold War and expressions of environmental consciousness in this genre.

YVONNE HOWELL is professor of Russian at University of Richmond. She has written on the historical and cultural context of sociobiology in the Soviet period, as well as on the relationship between scientific thought and aesthetic form in both Russian and Czech literature. Howell is also the author of Apocalyptic Realism: The Science Fiction of Arkady and Boris Strugatsky (1994). Currently, she is most interested in the legacy of science fiction as a mode of thinking in the late Soviet period, and she is involved in a project to translate several relatively unknown works of this genre.

SOFYA KHAGI is assistant professor of Russian literature in the Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. She has published articles on nineteenth- and twentieth-century Russian poetry and contemporary Russian and Baltic literatures and cultures in Slavic and East European Journal, Russian Review, Journal of Baltic Studies, and other journals. Her book, Silence and the Rest: Verbal Skepticism in Russian Poetry, is forthcoming from Northwestern University Press (2013).

CHARLES KING is professor of international affairs and government at Georgetown University. He is the author of five books, including The Ghost of Freedom: A History of the Caucasus (Oxford University Press, 2008) and Odessa: Genius and Death in a City of Dreams (W. W. Norton, 2011), which received the National Jewish Book Award.

MUIREANN MAGUIRE is career development fellow in Russian literature and culture at the University of Oxford. She is currently researching a monograph on the changing cultural representation of science and scientists in Russia from the mid-nineteenth to the mid-twentieth century. Her book Stalin's Ghosts: Gothic Themes in Early Soviet Literature (Peter Lang, 2012) examines the use of gothic-fantastic tropes and motifs in the work of Mikhail Bulgakov, Andrei Platonov, Sigizmund Krzhizhanovskii, Fedor Gladkov, and other early

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0037677900012845 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Soviet writers. She has published articles in Modern Language Review, New Zealand Slavonic Journal, and Slavonic and East European Review.

MATTHIAS SCHWARTZ is a research fellow and lecturer at the Institute for East-European Studies and the Peter Szondi-Institute of Comparative Literature at the Freie Universität Berlin. He has published previous articles on eastern European science fiction, and his PhD dissertation deals with the cultural history of Soviet adventure literature and science fiction from the 1920s to the 1950s (to be published in German in 2013). His further research interests include the interplay of science and arts in Russia from the eighteenth to the twentieth century; Soviet and post-Soviet cultural constructions of outer space, eastern European youth cultures; and young Polish, Russian, and Ukrainian literature in a globalized world.

JELENA SUBOTIĆ is assistant professor of political science at Georgia State University in Atlanta. She is the author of Hijacked Justice: Dealing with the Past in the Balkans (Cornell University Press, 2009), as well as numerous articles about human rights, transitional justice, identity politics, and the western Balkans that have been published in International Studies Quarterly, European Journal of International Relations, Journal of Peace Research, East European Politics and Societies, among other journals.

SUFIAN ZHEMUKHOV is a visiting scholar at George Washington University. He has published five books in Russian on the history, political thought, and civil society of the Caucasus, including Shora Nogma's Philosophy of History (Elbrus, 2007) and a book of poems in Circassian entitled The Mystery of the Soul (Elbrus, 1999).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0037677900012845 Published online by Cambridge University Press