CONTRIBUTORS TO THIS VOLUME

CHRISTOPHER ADLER is professor at the University of San Diego, and a composer and pianist. He commissions and performs contemporary concert music for the khaen, a free-reed mouth organ from Laos and Northeast Thailand, and his compositions draw upon over twenty years of research into the musical traditions of Thailand and Laos.

KATHRYN ALEXANDER is an assistant professor in the Honors College at the University of Arizona. She received her Ph.D. in ethnomusicology from the University of California, Riverside. A scholar of gender, sexuality, and ethnicity in North America, she has published articles in MUSICultures and the Yearbook for Traditional Music.

KATELYN BARNEY (Ph.D.) is a senior lecturer in the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies Unit at The University of Queensland, Australia. Her recent publications explore pathways for Indigenous students into higher degrees by research and collaborative research practices with Indigenous performers. She is the editor of Collaborative Ethnomusicology: New Approaches to Music Research between Indigenous and non-Indigenous Australians.

COLLEEN BERTSCH is a Ph.D. candidate in ethnomusicology at the University of Minnesota. Her dissertation focuses on connections between musical techniques and identity among Transylvanian folk violinists. Supported by a 2015-16 Fulbright Research Award to Romania, she conducted fieldwork with Hungarian, Romanian, and Roma violinists living in and around Cluj-Napoca.

CHRISTI-ANNE CASTRO received her Ph.D. in Ethnomusicology from the University of California, Los Angeles and currently is an associate professor and the director of the Center for Southeast Asian Studies at the University of Michigan. She is the author of Musical Renderings of the Philippine Nation (Oxford Press, 2011) and co-editor of the journal Music & Politics.

NEIL R. COULTER is assistant professor of world arts at Dallas International University in Dallas, Texas. He received a Ph.D. in musicology–ethnomusicology from Kent State University. He and his family lived in Papua New Guinea for 12 years, working in literacy, community development, government relations, and the documentation and revitalization of endangered musical traditions.

KIM CUNIO, composer, performer and musicologist, moves between the realization of traditional music, in particular that of Mizrachi Jewish chant, and new art

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.50.2018.0260 Published online by Cambridge University Press

music that is fused with modern technology. He is senior lecturer in composition and convenor in musicology at the Australian National University (ANU) as well as artistic director of ANU Music Press, Australia's first open source music label.

BRIAN DIETTRICH is Senior Lecturer in Ethnomusicology at Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. Brian's research has focused on music in Oceania and especially in the Federated States of Micronesia (FSM). He has chaired the ICTM Study Group on Music and Dance of Oceania since 2015.

JOSEPH KEOLA DONAGHY received his Ph.D. in Music (Ethnomusicology) from the University of Otago in 2011 and currently is an assistant professor of music at the University of Hawai'i Maui College, where he serves as faculty coordinator of both Music Studies and the Institute of Hawaiian Music.

CATHERINE FOLEY is senior lecturer and the founding course director of the M.A. programmes in ethnochoreology and Irish traditional dance performance at the University of Limerick, Ireland. She serves as chair of the ICTM Study Group on Ethnochoreology and is a member of the ICTM Executive Board. Dr. Foley has published widely on Irish dance including the monograph, Step Dancing in Ireland: Culture and History (Ashgate 2013).

MONIQUE GIROUX is Canada Research Chair in Indigenous Music, Culture, and Politics at the University of Lethbridge (Alberta, Canada). She is the author of several journal articles and book chapters on Métis music and on Métis/settler relations at old-time fiddle contests.

CATHERINE GRANT is author of Music Endangerment (OUP 2014), co-editor of Sustainable Futures for Music Cultures (OUP 2016), and chairs the Australia-New Zealand Regional Committee of ICTM. She is senior lecturer in music literature and research at Queensland Conservatorium, Griffith University, Australia.

JENNIE GUBNER is an ethnomusicologist in the Department of Folklore and Ethnomusicology at Indiana University Bloomington. Her scholarship focuses on digital, multimodal, and experiential approaches to ethnography through film and applied modes of researching and teaching ethnomusicology.

HSIN-WEN HSU is an assistant professor at the Graduate Institute of Ethnomusicology, National Taiwan Normal University. He has published articles on reflexive comparison and the institutionalization of Hakka music in Taiwan, and he has conducted extensive fieldwork on the organizational culture of pelimanni music in Finland. In addition, he is interested in the intersection of music and media, the discourses of audiophile culture, and the practices of applied ethnomusicology.

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.50.2018.0260 Published online by Cambridge University Press

UBOCHI STELLA IGBOKWE is a postgraduate student of the University of Uyo. She is a member of the Conference of Nigerian Music Educators (COMEN), Association of Nigerian Musicologists (ANIM), Association of Dance Scholars and Practitioners of Nigeria (ADSPON), and the International Council for Traditional Music (ICTM), where she has attended conferences and presented papers.

HENRY JOHNSON is professor at the University of Otago. He undertakes research on traditional and contemporary music in Europe, Asia, Australasia and the Pacific. His recent books include Global Glam (2016, co-edited) and The Shakuhachi (2014) and he has published widely on Japanese music and culture. He is an associate director of the Centre for Global Migrations.

ANTTI-VILLE KÄRJÄ is adjunct professor of Popular Music Studies at the University of Helsinki. He is also Chair of the Finnish Society for Ethnomusicology and serves as Member at Large in the Executive Committee of the International Association for the Study of Popular Music. His research interests include the intersections of the popular and the sacred in music, music historiography, music and postcolonial theory, and audiovisual ethnomusicology.

GRACE KOCH is honorary senior lecturer at the National Centre for Indigenous Studies at the Australian National University and has published widely on issues of collection management for audio-visual materials, native title and archives, and ethnomusicology. She has provided background research for five Australian Aboriginal land claims, concentrating upon the role of ceremony as evidence.

JEAN LAMBERT is an anthropologist and ethnomusicologist specialising in Yemen and the Arabian Peninsula, as well as the history of Arab music. From 2003-2008 he was the director of the French Centre for Archaeology and Social Sciences (CEFAS) in Yemen and from 2009-2014 he was the director of the Centre for Research in Ethnomusicology (CREM- LESC) at the Université Paris Nanterre. He is currently an assistant professor in the Musée de l'Homme (Paris) and an associate researcher in the CREM-LESC.

LAURA LEANTE is associate professor of ethnomusicology at Durham University, UK. Her research interests range over Indian classical and folk music, music of the South Asian diaspora, performance analysis, music and globalisation, popular music, and music semiotics. Dr. Leante is Secretary General of the European Seminar in Ethnomusicology (ESEM).

ANDREA LOW was awarded her Ph.D. in 2017 by the University of Auckland. Her thesis concerns the transmission of Hawaiian music in the early twentieth century and focuses on the life of Ernest Kaleihoku Kaai and his Hawaiian Troubadours.

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.50.2018.0260 Published online by Cambridge University Press

PIRKKO MOISALA is the professor of musicology and ethnomusicology at the University of Helsinki, Finland. Her current research focuses on indigenous peoples of Nepal, the Sámi of Northern Europe and the Inuit of Greenland. Her most recent article on Nepalese music was published in Musical Encounters with Deleuze and Guattari (Bloomsbury, 2017), which she co-edited.

EMI OKADA received her Ph.D. in musicology from the Tokyo University of the Arts in 2010 and is currently an associate professor at University of the Ryukyus, Okinawa. Her recent research focuses on music culture of Nagaland, Northeast India.

MÍCHEAL Ó SÚILLEABHÁIN is Founding Director of the Irish World Academy of Music and Dance (est.1994) at the University of Limerick, Ireland. He is a musician, composer, academic, and educationalist. He has recorded over twenty albums, frequently with the Irish Chamber Orchestra and internationally renowned Irish traditional musicians. Awards include an Honorary DMus from the National University of Ireland at University College Cork (2005) and the Royal Scottish Conservatoire (2017).

LIZ PRZYBYLSKI earned her Ph.D. in music from Northwestern University and is currently an assistant professor of music at the University of California, Riverside. She is the author of numerous articles and chapters on Indigenous hip hop, including "Customs and Duty: Indigenous Hip Hop and the US-Canada Border" (Journal of Borderlands Studies 2017).

INDRA RIDWAN is a Sundanese ethnomusicologist, composer, and music arranger. His M.A. thesis focuses on Sundanese children's songs, and his doctoral dissertation examines the role of the arranger in pop Sunda, a Sundanese form of popular music from West Java, Indonesia. His current research is on the history of Sundanese modern music.

JONATHAN RITTER is an associate professor of ethnomusicology at the University of California Riverside. His research focuses on indigenous and Afro-Hispanic musical cultures of Andean South America, with a particular interest in how music is implicated in the work of cultural memory and political activism.

MAYCO A. SANTAELLA received his Ph.D. from the University of Hawai'i. He has focused on the gong-row tradition of the Sulu Zone and its links to the extended Nusantara region, and conducted research for his doctoral studies in Central Sulawesi as a Fulbright recipient. He is currently a senior lecturer in ethnomusicology and chair of the Music Program at Sunway University in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia.

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.50.2018.0260 Published online by Cambridge University Press

LISELOTTE SELS received her Ph.D. in Art Science from Ghent University in 2014, and works as a researcher on Iranian music at Artesis Plantijn University College Antwerp. Recent publications include the book chapter "Mixing Multiple Tracks: Migration, Diaspora and Transcultural Music in Flanders" in Made in the Low Countries (Routledge, 2017).

HEATHER SPARLING is the Canada Research Chair in Musical Traditions and an Associate Professor of Ethnomusicology at Cape Breton University. She researches issues of language and music as well as memory and memorialization, focusing on Gaelic song and vernacular dance in Nova Scotia and disaster songs in Atlantic Canada.

LISA URKEVICH, Ph.D., is a professor of musicology-ethnomusicology and Chair of the Department of Music and Drama at the American University of Kuwait. She specialises in music of the Arabian Peninsula and is the author of Music and Traditions of the Arabian Peninsula: Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Bahrain, and Qatar (Routledge, 2015).

YING-FEN WANG (Ph.D., University of Pittsburgh, 1992) is professor and founder director of the Graduate Institute of Musicology at National Taiwan University. She has been working on nanguan music and the history of music in Taiwan, particularly the record industry and radio program. She published a book and a CD-set on Kurosawa Takatomo's wartime survey of Taiwan music in 1943 (2008). She also edited a book Sounds from 1922: Tanabe Hisao's Fieldwork in Colonial Taiwan and Amoy (2017).

ALEYSIA WHITMORE is assistant professor of ethnomusicology at the University of Denver, Colorado. Her research focuses on the world music industry, globalisation, and cultural policy. Aleysia holds a BMus from the University of Toronto and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in ethnomusicology from Brown University.

https://doi.org/10.5921/yeartradmusi.50.2018.0260 Published online by Cambridge University Press