Violence and Modernization
Henry Bienen

Bienen reviews present scholarly knowledge about violence and discusses it in relation to modernization. He looks at ghetto violence, excluding racial violence; internal war, excluding guerrilla warfare, counter-insurgency, and civil war; revolution; works dealing with the structure, typologies, and romance of violence; and totalitarianism. He concludes by suggesting areas for further study. Published for the Adlai Stevenson Institute of International Affairs by the University of Chicago Press.

Background to Evolution in Africa
Edited by W. W. Bishop and J. D. Clark

New evidence by paleontologists, geologists, and archaeologists has revised established ideas about the origins and development of land areas, animal species, patterns of vegetation, of man and his hominid and hominoid predecessors. The evidence presented in these papers will constitute basic reading for scientists attending the Sixth Pan-African Congress on Prehistory and Quaternary Research. Papers in English and French are preceded by abstracts in the other language, making a body of important material available to an enlarged audience.

Atlas of African Prehistory
Compiled by J. D. Clark
Under the auspices of the Pan-African Congress on Prehistory

The first to represent a whole continent, these maps relate human evolution to its setting in prehistoric Africa. Many experts collaborated to produce 12 base maps of ecology and paleo-ecology and 32 transparent overlays showing political boundaries, cultural distributions, fossil fauna, fossil man sites, and present-day discontinuous distributions of certain mammals and birds. A pamphlet explains the maps and overlays. Produced with aid from the Wenner-Gren Foundation of Anthropological Research.

Towards a Pax Africana
A Study of Ideology and Ambition
Ali A. Mazrui

"Perhaps the most crucial aspect of the ethic of self government in Africa lies in the African's ambition to be his own policeman," Mazrui writes. Today Africans are jealously assuming the task of keeping peace within their continent and preserving it from further foreign intervention. Mazrui describes their efforts to achieve self-pacification by examining the search for an African identity, the concept of racial sovereignty, the development of native political leadership, and the Pan African movement. Nature of Human Society series.

Dreams and Deeds
Achievement Motivation in Nigeria
By Robert A. LeVine

With the assistance of Eugene Strangman and Leonard Unterberger

Levine analyzes the dream reports, TAT scores, and essays of schoolboys from the Ibo, the Yoruba, and the Hausa—three major ethnic groups which have traditionally had widely contrasting systems of social mobility. His findings concerning the relation of ethnic-group difference to explicit value-attitude formulations, educational achievement, and economic and political conduct indicate new directions in the analysis of contemporary African social behavior.
