Contributors

JENNIFER ADAMS expects her doctorate in administration, planning and social policy from Harvard University in 2005. She was formerly a primary school teacher in China and now studies educational decentralization, social capital, teacher quality and children's welfare in China. Her current research explores the influence of community, social and economic conditions on children's schools in Gansu province. She is a recipient of a research and training grant from the Spencer Foundation.

ROBERT ASH is professor of economics with special reference to China and Taiwan in the department of economics and the Centre for Financial and Management Studies, and director of the Taiwan studies programme, at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London.

I-RU CHEN is a research fellow at the National Security Council, Taiwan. Her current research is concerned with foreign brides in Taiwan and cross-strait cultural exchange.

JENS DAMM is Wissenschaftlicher Assistent of Sinology at the Seminar of East Asian Studies, Freie Universität Berlin. His major field of research includes identity politics in Chinese societies, in particular gender/queer studies, discourses of "Chineseness" and the use of modern communication technologies.

NARA DILLON is an assistant professor of political studies at Bard College.

ERICA S. DOWNS recently received her PhD in politics from Princeton University. Her research focuses on Chinese energy issues.

MARY S. ERBAUGH is courtesy research associate at the Center for Asian and Pacific Studies, University of Oregon.

MOBO GAO is an associate professor in the School of Asian Languages and Studies, University of Tasmania, where he teaches contemporary Chinese politics and culture, and Chinese language. His most recent publications include Gao Village: Rural Life in Modern China (1999), An Introduction to Mandarin Chinese (2000) and A Reference Grammar of Mandarin Chinese (2000).

BRUCE GILLEY is a Phd candidate in politics at Princeton University and author of China's Democratic Future (2004).

JOHN GITTINGS was China specialist for The Guardian, 1983–2003, and first visited China in 1971. He is now a research associate at the Centre for Chinese Studies, School of Oriental and African Studies.

LEI GUANG is an assistant professor of political science at San Diego State University and a visiting research fellow with the programme on agrarian studies at Yale University (2004–05). He has written articles on Chinese politics and migration for Modern China, Journal of Contemporary China, positions: east asia cultures critique, International Migration Review and Pacific Review. He is currently working on a book on migrant workers and rural–urban divide in China.

© The China Quarterly, 2005

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741005000135 Published online by Cambridge University Press

EMILY HANNUM is assistant professor of sociology at the University of Pennsylvania. Her research interests include education, social inequality, poverty and child welfare. Since 1998 she has directed the Gansu Survey of Children and Families – a research project that investigates family, school and community factors that support children's education and healthy development in rural northwest China. Her current work includes analyses of the Gansu data to investigate mechanisms linking rural poverty and educational outcomes.

MARK HARRISON is a research fellow in Chinese Studies at the Centre for the Study of Democracy at the University of Westminster.

SEBASTIAN HEILMANN received a doctoral degree from the department of law and economics at the Saar University, Germany, in 1993. From 1994 to 1999 he worked as a senior researcher at the Federal Institute for Asian Affairs in Hamburg. In October 1999, he became professor of comparative government (political economy of China) at Trier University. Recent books (in German) include The Politics of Economic Reform in China and Russia (2000); The Chinese Equity Market (co-editor, 2002); and The Political System of the People's Republic of China (second edition, 2004).

JOHN FUH-SHENG HSIEH is professor of political science and director of the Center for Asian Studies at the University of South Carolina.

CHANG-TAI HUNG is professor of humanities in the Division of Humanities at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology. His most recent book is Xin wenhuashi yu Zhongguo zhengzhi (The New Cultural History and Chinese Politics) (2003).

SUKHAN JACKSON is a senior lecturer in economics at the University of Queensland. She has published extensively on health and social impacts of large dams, on the economics of disease control, health services and labour reforms in China, and on the socio-economics of ageing in Australia.

JON EUGENE VON KOWALLIS is senior lecturer in Chinese Studies at the University of New South Wales in Sydney. He is author of The Lyrical Lu Xun: a Study of his Classical-style Verse (1996) and The Subtle Revolution: Poets of the 'Old Schools' in late Qing and early Republican China (2005).

LI PENG is a biologist and epidemiologist. She is a senior researcher at the Henan Centre for Disease Control in Zhengzhou, Henan province. Her research addresses health services, disease control and infectious diseases in China.

LIU XI-LI is professor at the Henan Centre of Disease Control, Zhenghou, Henan province.

JOYCE A. MADANCY is associate professor of history and director of East Asian Studies at Union College in Schenectady, New York.

BARBARA MITTLER holds the chair in Modern Chinese Studies at the University of Heidelberg. Her books include Dangerous Tunes. The Politics of Chinese Music in Hong Kong, Taiwan and the People's Republic of China since 1949 (Wiesbaden, 1997) and A Newspaper

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741005000135 Published online by Cambridge University Press

for China? Power, Identity and Change in Shanghai's News Media, 1872–1912 (2004).

EMERSON M. S. NIOU is professor of political science at Duke University and professor of government and public administration at the Chinese University of Hong Kong. His current projects include studies of institutions and reforms in China.

DAVID A. PALMER received his PhD from the École Pratique des Hautes Études. He is Eileen Barker Fellow in religion and contemporary society at the London School of Economics and Political Science, and a visiting assistant professor at the École Française d'Extrême-Orient in Hong Kong.

ELIZABETH J. REMICK is associate professor of political science at Tufts University. Her current research is on Chinese local governments' regulation and taxation of prostitution in Republican China.

XIAOYUAN SHANG is a research fellow at the Social Policy Research Centre, University of New South Wales. She has conducted a series of research projects for international agencies relating to China's social welfare reform, focusing on issues associated with social security reforms, the alleviation of poverty, child protection and social policies for vulnerable groups. Her main work includes In Search of Civil Society, with Gordon White and Jude Howell, and many articles published in Journal of Social Policy, Social Service Review, Chinese Journal of Social Science. She can be contacted on email: x.shang@unsw.edu.au.

ADRIAN C. SLEIGH is professor at the National Centre of Epidemiology and Population Health, Australian National University, Canberra.

RICHARD P. SUTTMEIER is professor of political science at the University of Oregon. He has written widely on Chinese scientific and technological development for a number of years.

FRANCESCA TAROCCO is lecturer in Buddhist Studies at the department of religion and theology, the University of Manchester. Her research interests include the history of later Chinese Buddhism and Buddhist cultural practices.

ANDREW WEDEMAN is an associated professor of political science at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln. His research focuses on the political economy of reform in China and, specifically, on the effects of corruption on development, both in China and elsewhere in the developing world. Recent publications include From Mao to Market: Rent Seeking, Local Protectionism, and Marketization in China; "Anticorruption campaigns and the intensification of corruption in China," in Journal of Contemporary China; and "Great disorder under heaven: the paradox of endemic corruption and rapid growth in contemporary China," in China Review.

TIMOTHY B. WESTON is associate professor of history at the University of Colorado with a specialization in modern Chinese history. He is the author of The Power of Position: Beijing University, Intellectuals, and Chinese Political Culture, 1898–1929 (2004) and the co-editor of China beyond the Headlines (2000). Currently, he is doing research on journalists and journalism in Republican-era China.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741005000135 Published online by Cambridge University Press

XIAOMING WU is senior lecturer in Chinese at the University of Canterbury. His research interests include traditional Chinese thought, Chinese literature, comparative philosophy and contemporary Chinese society. His recent works include Rereading Confucius (2003), and articles published in the Journal of Social Policy, Social Service Review and Journal of Social Policy and Society.

YUE WU is a student at the University of Sydney. He has participated in a series of projects for international and Chinese agencies relating to child protection policies in China since 2001.

GUOBIN YANG is an assistant professor in the department of sociology of the University of Hawai'i at Manoa and a research scholar in the department of Asian and Middle Eastern cultures of Barnard College, New York City. From September 2003 to May 2004, he was a residential fellow at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars in Washington, DC. He can be reached at guobin@hawaii.edu.

KA-CHE YIP is professor of history at the University of Maryland Baltimore County. His current research interests include the history of public health and diseases in modern and contemporary China.

LU ZHENG is a PhD candidate in sociology at Stanford University. His primary research interests are organizations, economic sociology and stratification.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0305741005000135 Published online by Cambridge University Press