NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Maud Bracke teaches Modern European History at the University of Glasgow. Her PhD (EUI, 2004), a study of the Italian and French communist parties in 1968, is published as Which socialism, whose detente? West European communism and the Czechoslovak crisis of 1968 (New York, 2007; Italian translation: Rome, 2008). She has published widely on Western communism, '1968', and Italian feminism, in journals such as European History Quarterly, Contemporary European History, Europe-Asia Studies, and forthcoming in the Journal of Contemporary History and Women's History Review. She is currently preparing a monograph on Italian 1970s feminism.

Rebecca Clifford is Lecturer in Modern History at Swansea University. She earned her doctoral degree from the University of Oxford in 2008. She has recently completed work on an AHRC-funded collaborative oral history project entitled 'Around 1968: Activism, Networks, Trajectories', which drew together 13 historians working on 14 different European countries. The research team's collectively-authored book, Europe's '68: Voices and Networks of Revolt, will be published by Oxford University Press in late 2012. Other recent publications co-authored with team members include (with Nigel Townson) 'The Church in Crisis: Catholic Activism and "1968"', Cultural and Social History, 8:4 (December 2011).

John Dickie is Professor of Italian Studies at University College London. He is the author, among other works, of Cosa Nostra. A History of the Sicilian Mafia (2004). His latest book, Mafia Brotherhoods, a parallel history of the camorra, the mafia and the 'ndrangheta, has recently been published in paperback.

Susanna Ferlito is associate professor of Italian Studies at the University of Minnesota. She was most recently awarded a semester Fellowship at the Institute for Advanced Study, University of Minnesota, and is currently working on a book project on the politics and aesthetics of women's resentment in the nineteenth century.

Matthew Klugman lectures in the School of Sport and Exercise Science at Victoria University, Melbourne, Australia. His research interests include those who love and hate sport, and the intersections of sport, affects, bodies, religion, migration, race and sexuality. His most recent book – Passion Play: Love, Hope and Heartbreak at the Footy (Melbourne, 2009) – traces the seasonal emotions of Australian Rules football fans.

Giacomo Lichtner, born in Rome and educated in the UK, teaches Italian and European history at Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. He is the author of Film and the Shoah in France and Italy (London, 2008), and has also published articles in the Journal of Modern Italian Studies, Asian Survey, and Studi d'italianistica nell'Africa australe, as well as several chapters in edited volumes.

Penelope (Penny) Morris is Senior Lecturer in Italian at the University of Glasgow. Her research interests include 20th-century women's history and writing, the private sphere and the emotions. She is author of a monograph and articles on the writer and Resistance activist Giovanna Zangrandi and editor of Women in Italy 1945–60 (New York, 2006). She has a number of publications on advice

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1353294400000223 Published online by Cambridge University Press

columns and letters pages in Italy, the latest of which, the chapter '"Cari compagni, sto male...": Emozioni e politica nelle lettere a Lotta continua', appears in the volume she co-edited with Francesco Ricatti and Mark Seymour: Politica ed emozioni nella storia d'Italia dal 1848 a oggi (Rome, Viella, 2012, pp. 211–240).

Catherine O'Rawe is Senior Lecturer in Italian at Bristol University. She is co-editor of the book The Femme Fatale: Images, Histories, Contexts (Palgrave, 2010), and, with Alan O'Leary, of the special issue of Italian Studies on 'Thinking Italian Film' (2008). She is currently writing a book on masculinity and stardom in contemporary Italian cinema.

Francesco Ricatti is Cassamarca Senior Lecturer at the University of the Sunshine Coast, Queensland, Australia. He coordinates the Italian language program and teaches migration history. He is the author of Embodying Migrants: Italians in Postwar Australia (Bern, Peter Lang, 2011). He has published various book chapters on migration and on football, as well as articles in journals, including Australian Journal of Politics and History, History Australia, Annali d'Italianistica and Women's History Review. He is the co-editor with Penny Morris and Mark Seymour of the recently published volume Politica ed emozioni nella storia d'Italia dal 1848 a oggi (Rome, Viella, 2012).

Mark Seymour teaches Italian, European and world history at the University of Otago, Dunedin, New Zealand. He is the author of Debating Divorce in Italy (New York, 2006), and has published articles in the Journal of Modern Italian Studies, Genesis, Social History, and StoricaMente. In 2010 he guest-edited a special issue of Modern Italy commemorating Garibaldi and Italian unification. His latest article, 'Emotional Arenas', based on an 1879 Rome murder trial, appears in Rethinking History. With Penny Morris and Francesco Ricatti, he has co-edited a further volume on the emotions in Italy, Politica ed emozioni nella storia d'Italia dal 1848 a oggi (Rome, Viella, 2012).

Vanda Wilcox completed her D.Phil. entitled 'Morale and Discipline in the Italian army, 1915–1918' at the University of Oxford in 2006 and now teaches Italian and European history at John Cabot University, Rome. She has published on various military, social, and cultural aspects of the experience and memory of the First World War in Italy and is currently working on the Italian troops' experience in Libya (1911–12) and on Italy's participation in the Entente alliance.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1353294400000223 Published online by Cambridge University Press