Contributors to this Issue

Steve Bruce is a Professor of Sociology, University of Aberdeen. In 2003, he was elected a Fellow of the British Academy and in 2005, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He is the author of 18 books including Politics and Paisley and over 60 journal articles on the sociology of religion, religion and politics, and terrorism.

Francesco Cavatorta is a Lecturer in International Relations and Middle East Studies in the School of Law and Government at Dublin City University, Dublin, Ireland. He is the co-editor (with Frédéric Volpi) of Democratization in the Muslim World: Changing Patterns of Authority and Power. He has published articles in Democratization, Journal of Modern African Studies, Government and Opposition, Journal of North African Studies, and West European Politics.

Greg Forster is the author of John Locke's Politics of Moral Consensus. His next book, on the history of Christian political thought, is forthcoming in 2008. He received his Ph.D. with Distinction from Yale University in 2002. He currently researches education policy as a senior fellow at the Milton and Rose D. Friedman Foundation.

Dennis Goldford is a Professor of Politics at Drake University, where he teaches political and constitutional theory. He is the author of The American Constitution and the Debate over Originalism. He is currently working on developing a new general theory of the Establishment Clause.

Farah Godrej is an Assistant Professor of Political Theory in the Department of Political Science at the University of California, Riverside. Her areas of research include non-Western political thought, ancient and contemporary Indian philosophy, Gandhian political thought, and the political theory of globalization. Her work has appeared in the Review of Politics, and her current book project is entitled Cosmopolitanism Beyond the West.

Phillip W. Gray is a Post-Doctoral Fellow at Hong Kong Baptist University's Department of Government and International Studies. In 2007, he published Being in the Just War: Ontology and the Decline of the Just War Tradition. He has a forthcoming article on Christian pacifism in Politics and Religion.

Torbjørn Knutsen is a Professor of Political Science at the Norwegian University of Science and Technology. He has conducted research at the University of Southern California, the Norwegian Nobel Institute, and the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Relations. Recent monographs include A History of International Relations Theory, The Rise and Fall of World Orders, and Blodspor: Om bakgrunnen til 11 september. He is the editor of the

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1755048308000369 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Norwegian Journal of Political Science and is currently working on issues concerning democracy, peace, terrorism and foreign policy.

Mark Lilla is a Professor of Humanities at Columbia University. His work ranges widely in the history of ideas, though his central concerns have been the relation between religion and politics and the legacy of the modern Western enlightenment. His books include G.B. Vico: The Making of an Anti-Modern, The Reckless Mind: Intellectuals in Politics, and The Stillborn God: Religion, Politics, and the Modern West. His current research focuses on the religious concepts of conversion and innocence.

Maurice Mangum is an Assistant Professor at the Texas Southern University, School of Public Affairs. A specialist in the political behavior of African Americans, he has published articles in The American Review of Politics, Political Research Quarterly, Polity, Policy Studies Journal, National Political Science Review, Journal of Political Science, and The Journal of Black Studies.

Myunghee Kim is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Central Florida. She specializes in comparative politics with research interests in political institutions, political behavior, political development, and religion. An article she co-authored with Michael D. McDonald and Silvia Mendes: Cross-temporal and Cross-national Comparisons of Party Left-Right Positions was published in 2007.

Brent F. Nelsen is a Professor of Political Science at Furman University in Greenville, South Carolina. His publications include, with Alexander Stubb, The European Union: Readings on the Theory and Practice of European Integration and with James L. Guth and Cleveland R. Fraser: Does Religion Matter? Christianity and Public Support for the European Union. He is currently working on a book with James L. Guth on religion and politics in the European Union.

Kim Ian Parker has written more than a dozen peer-reviewed articles on religious and political affairs, as well as four books, the most recent of which is The Biblical Politics of John Locke. He is currently researching a monograph-length study on early modern political thought and the crisis of religious authority. He is a Full Professor in the Department of Religious Studies at Memorial University in St. John's, Newfoundland.

Mel Piehl is a Professor of Humanities and Dean of Christ College, the honors College of Valparaiso University. His scholarly interests center on American intellectual and religious history, with particular attention to American Catholic history and the relations between religion and social thought. He is the author of Breaking Bread: The Catholic Worker and the Origin of Catholic Radicalism in America and co-author of The Brief American Pageant, as well as essays appearing in a number of books and journals.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1755048308000369 Published online by Cambridge University Press

S. Alan Ray is Senior Vice Provost for the University of New Hampshire. In July 2008 he will become President and Professor of Religion and Society at Elmhurst College, Elmhurst, Illinois. Ray, a citizen of the Cherokee Nation, is a scholar of federal Indian law and Native American sacred sites. His recent publications include Native American Sacred Sites under Federal Law, A Race or a Nation? Cherokee National Identity and the Status of Freedmen's Descendants, and Native American Identity and the Challenge of Kennewick Man.

Jean-Pierre Reed is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of Memphis. His primary research interests include the Sociology of Revolutions/Social Movements, Theory, and Culture. He is presently working on completing a book on the Nicaraguan Revolution. In this project, he studies, among other things, the role of religion in the insurrectionary period.

Mark Schwehn is a Professor of History and Humanities at Christ College, the honors College of Valparaiso University. He has published essays on Henry Adams and William James, a book on religion and the rise of the modern university in America (Exiles from Eden: Religion and the Academic Vocation in America), an anthology on teaching (Everyone a Teacher), and most recently an anthology entitled Leading Lives that Matter: What We Should Do and Who We Should Be. He also serves as the project director of the Lilly Fellows Program in Humanities and the Arts, which includes post-doctoral teaching fellows for positions of educational leadership within church-related institutions of higher learning.

Milan Vukomanović is an Associate Professor of Sociology of Religion at the University of Belgrade. He received his Ph.D. in Religious Studies at the University of Pittsburgh in 1993. Vukomanović is the author of six books and co-editor of five other volumes, on topics ranging from the sociology of religion and the history of religions to peace studies and inter-religious dialogue. He has been a guest lecturer at various international schools, seminars and programs, including the Semester at Sea Summer Voyage of 2002.

J. Matthew Wilson is an Associate Professor of Political Science at Southern Methodist University. He has authored numerous articles on public opinion, electoral choice, and religion and politics that have appeared in a range of scholarly journals, including The American Journal of Political Science, The Journal of Politics, and Political Research Quarterly. In addition, he is the editor of From Pews to Polling Places: Faith and Politics in the American Religious Mosaic. He is a Next Generation Fellow of the American Assembly at Columbia University, and currently serves on the executive council of the APSA section on Elections, Public Opinion, and Voting Behavior.

Eugene Victor Wolfenstein is a Professor of Political Science at UCLA. His most recent books are Inside/Outside Nietzsche: Psychoanalytic Explorations and A Gift of the Spirit: Reading the Souls of Black Folk. His current project has the working title Talking Books: Toni Morrison among the Ancestors.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S1755048308000369 Published online by Cambridge University Press