———. Morning Yet on Creation Day. London: Heinemann, 1975. Print.
———. No Longer at Ease. London: Heinemann, 1960. Print.
———. There Was a Country: A Personal History of Biafra. New York: Penguin, 2012. Print.
———. Things Fall Apart. London: Heinemann, 1958. Print.
Afigbo, Adiele. "The Indigenous Political Systems of the Igbo." Igbo History and Society: The Essays of Adiele Afigbo. Ed. Toyin Falola. Trenton: Africa World, 2005. 155–65. Print.

CONTRIBUTORS

ELLEKE BOEHMER is the professor of world literature in English at the University of Oxford. Her most recent book is The Postcolonial Low Countries, with Sarah De Mul (Lexington, 2012). Empire Networks 1870–1915, on the early Indian diaspora in Britain, and a fiction, The Shouting in the Dark, are forthcoming.

RHONDA COBHAM-SANDER is professor of English and black studies at Amherst College. She is a coeditor of Watchers and Seekers: Creative Writing by Black Women (Bedrick, 1988), and her essays on Caribbean and African literature have appeared in such journals as Transition, Callaloo, Research in African Literatures, the Women's Review of Books, and Small Axe.

UZOMA ESONWANNE, associate professor in the Department of English and the Centre for Comparative Literature at the University of Toronto, specializes in postcolonial theory and African literature.

HARRY GARUBA teaches at the University of Cape Town, where he has joint appointments in the Centre for African Studies and the English department. His current research is on Africa and the idea of world literature.

EILEEN JULIEN is professor of comparative literature and French and Italian at Indiana University, Bloomington, where she directs the Institute for Advanced Study. She is, most recently, the author of Travels with Mae: Scenes from a New Orleans Girlhood (Indiana UP, 2009) and a coeditor of the forthcoming Locations and Dislocations of African Literature: A Dialogue between Humanists and Social Scientists (Africa World, 2014). She is at work on a study of "modernity" in the literature and arts of Senegal.

JAMES OGUDE, a professor of African literature and cultures, is a research fellow at the Centre for the Advancement of Scholarship at the University of Pretoria. Known for his scholarship on Ngũgĩ and, more recently, for his research on popular arts in East Africa, he is working on popular culture and urban identities.

ELAINE SAVORY, associate professor of literary studies at the New School, is working on a book on postcolonial elegiac poetry, and she has recently published a number of essays on ecocriticism.

https://doi.org/10.1632/S0030812900168269 Published online by Cambridge University Press