Selected and Introduced by Anwar S. Dil. A wide range of topics in the psychological and social aspects of language is covered in this collection of eighteen papers by a leading authority in the fields of bilingualism and child language acquisition. The Structure of the Japanese Language
by Susumu Kuno
Some features of Japanese are peculiarities of the language, while others are shared by English and various other languages of the world. At times two features, one in Japanese and one, for example, in English, that may look totally unrelated on casual inspection turn out to be a manifestation of the same principle, either syntactic or semantic, which governs the two languages. Whenever possible each feature of Japanese that the book discusses is contrasted with features in English that are overtly or covertly related to it, and the similarities and differences that exist between the two languages with respect to this feature are examined. Thus the book can be called a contrastive grammar of Japanese and English.

Susumu Kuno is Professor of Linguistics, Harvard University. This is volume three in the series, Current Studies in Linguistics.

African Language Structures
William E. Welmers
Drawing on 30 years of experience in the analysis and teaching of African languages, Professor Welmers surveys a wide range of structural characteristics, both phonological and grammatical, of the languages of sub-Saharan Africa. He has organized the volume by linguistic topics with extensive discussions of tonal systems, noun classifications, and the variety of verbal constructions in representative languages. The emphasis of the volume is on the organization of language data rather than on the technicalities of theoretical linguistics.

Journal of Phonetics

editor: M. A. A. TATHAM

editorial board: Arthur Abramson, Osamu Fujimura, Peter Ladefoged, Ilse Lehiste, Björn Lindblom, Peter MacNeilage, Sieb Nooteboom, Sven Ohman, and Eli Fischer Jørgensen

The broad spectrum approach of the Journal of Phonetics fills a gap left open by a dearth of textbooks on a subject of growing popularity and importance. The journal includes theoretically-oriented, experimental studies that facilitate the selection and refinement of phonetic models.

Contents of Volume 1, Number 1: M. HAGGARD: Abbreviation of Consonants in English Pre- and Post-Vocalic Clusters. S. G. NOOTEBOOM: The Perceptual Reality of Some Prosodic Durations. H. HOLLIEN, J. MICHEL and E. THOMAS DOHERTY: A Method for Analyzing Vocal Jitter in Sustained Phonation. O. FUJIMURA, I. F. TATSUMI and R. KAGAYA: Computational Processing of Palatographic Patterns. P. F. MacNEILAGE: Preliminaries to the Study of Single Motor Activity in Speech Musculature. A. S. ABRAMSON and LEIGH LISKER: Voice-Timing Perception in Spanish Word-Initial Stops. P. LADEFOGED: The Features of the Larynx. Review: P. MANSELL: Preliminaries to Linguistic Phonetics by P. Ladefoged.
