Contributors to this Issue

KATHLEEN CANNING teaches German history and European gender history since 1988 at the University of Michigan (Department of History, 1029 Tisch Hall, Ann Arbor, MI 48109–1003; e-mail: kcanning@umich.edu). She is the author of Languages of Labor and Gender: Female Factory Work in Germany 1850–1914 (Ithaca, 1996) and coeditor with Sonya O. Rose of Gender, Citizenships, and Subjectivities (London, 2002). She has recently submitted an essay collection, The Gender of German History, for publication and is currently working toward the completion of a book-length study of gender and citizenship in the aftermath of war and revolution in Germany, 1914–1930.

KENNETH L. LEDFORD is Associate Professor of History and Law at Case Western Reserve University (Department of History, 11201 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, OH, 44106–7107; e-mail: kenneth.ledford@case.edu). He has written a book and several articles that consider the limited and limiting nature of liberal notions of law, legal processes, and legal professions in capitalist societies. This article relates to his current book project, "Prussian Judges and the Rule of Law in Germany, 1848–1914." He studied with Vernon Lidtke from 1982–1988 and remembers those years fondly.

NANCY REAGIN is Professor of History and Director of the Women's and Gender Studies Program at Pace University (New York, NY 10038; email: nreagin@aol.com). She received her Ph.D. from The John Hopkins University. She is the author of numerous articles and a book, A German Women's Movement: Class and Gender in Hanover, 1890–1933 (Chapel Hill, 1995). She is currently completing a second monograph on gender and German national identity between 1870–1945, to be published by Cambridge University Press.

GARY D. STARK is Professor of History at Grand Valley State University (Allendale, MI 49401; e-mail: starkg@gvsu.edu). He is the author of Entrepreneurs of Ideology: Neoconservative Publishers in Germany, 1890–1933 (Chapel Hill, 1981) and coeditor of Essays on Culture and Society in Modern Germany (Arlington, TX, 1982). His most recent essay is "All Quiet on the Home Front: Popular Entertainments, Censorship and Civilian Morale in Germany, 1914–1918," in Frans Coetzee and Marilyn Shevin-Coetzee, eds., Authority, Identity and the Social History of the Great War: Essays in Comparative History (Providence, 1995). He is currently completing a book about literary censorship in imperial Germany.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0008938900002429 Published online by Cambridge University Press

LAWRENCE D. STOKES is an Adjunct Professor of History, now retired, at Dalhousie University (Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada B3H 4P9; e-mail: elstokes@ns.sympatico.ca). His most recent books are Der Eutiner Dichterkreis und der Nationalsozialismus 1936–1945: Eine Dokumentation (Neumünster, 2001); and "Meine kleine Stadt steht für tausend andere . . .": Studien zur Geschichte von Eutin in Holstein, 1918–1945 (Eutin, 2004). He is currently working on a study of the many connections of the American author Thomas Wolfe with Germany, as well as a collection of essays about German-Canadian relations during the 1930s and 1940s.

RAYMOND C. SUN is an Associate Professor of History at Washington State University (Department of History, Wilson 301, P.O. Box 644030, Pullman, WA 99164–4030; e-mail: sunray@wsu.edu). He received his Ph.D. from the Johns Hopkins University in 1992. His book "Before the Enemy is Within Our Walls," Catholic Workers in Cologne, 1885–1912: A Social and Political History (1999) is a revised version of the dissertation he wrote under the direction of Vernon Lidtke. He is currently actively involved in teaching about Nazism, the Holocaust, and comparable genocide. His current research interests include an investigation of the Catholic milieu in the Weimar era and the study of the German Pentecostal movement.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0008938900002429 Published online by Cambridge University Press