ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This volume was originally conceived in a research seminar at the University of East Anglia nearly a decade ago and has taken some years to produce. In the process of collating and editing the material we have accumulated a number of debts. I am very grateful for a British Academy Small Research Grant, without which it would have been impossible to have carried out much of the collation and checking of material. The Royal Historical Society patiently awaited the manuscript, while its Literary Director, Arthur Burns, was understanding and extremely helpful in his advice. A number of archivists and librarians across the country assisted us in the research, but particular thanks are due to Paul Webster at Liverpool Record Office for his help in the summer of 2011. We are grateful to Daniel Pearce, Gwenda Edwards, and Paul Gibb of Cambridge University Press for their hard work on the volume, to our copy-editor, Hester Higton, who has been eagle-eyed, helping us to avoid a number of pitfalls, and to Meg Davies for her skilful work on the index. Our thanks to Roy Bridge and Thomas Otte for helping us track down Count Montgelas, to Angus Hawkins for advice about the fourteenth Earl of Derby's handwriting, to Jennifer Davey for taking time out from her own research to check references and for advice regarding Lady Derby, and to Laurence Guymer for his assistance with the Danubian Principalities. We would like to thank the Marquess of Salisbury, the Earl of Malmesbury, the British Library, The National Archives, and Hampshire Record Office for kindly permitting us to use primary material. We are grateful to the Earl of Derby for depositing the Derby Papers at Liverpool Record Office, and to the National Trust for its deposit of the Hughenden Papers at the Bodleian Library. If we have inadvertently failed to acknowledge anyone's copyright, we would be grateful if they would contact us at the publishers so that any oversight can be corrected.

Finally, I must express my gratitude to my fellow-editors, John Charmley and Bendor Grosvenor, who have been unfailingly supportive, assisting with all kinds of obscure questions and tracking down elusive information. Bendor Grosvenor's work gathering material for Chapter Four, in particular, was invaluable. This volume is the joint result of our labours, and we hope others find the material as interesting as we do.
